From Wire Reports

OTTAWA — Rolled-up shirtsleeves under a Bond Street suit jacket? Stylish-dresser Pierre Elliott Trudeau?

Provincial premiers can't be blamed for looking closely at the cuffs of the Prime Minister's jacket Monday morning when they sit down for the opening session of the constitutional conference here. If no shirt cuffs are showing, there could be fireworks.

Trudeau told reporters Saturday that he was prepared to roll up his sleeves and fight for a bilingual Canada. But, he added, he was not going to "fight the premiers with my sleeves rolled up."

The reporters came pounding on the door of his official residence asking for elaboration of a

Toronto newspaper interview in which he said he would quit his job and leave the country if it wasn't prepared to accept his concept of bilingualism.

Trudeau said that he had no intention of quitting. He explained that his job wasn't on the line, but a concept of a Canada free from language ghettos, with bilingualism spread across the country.

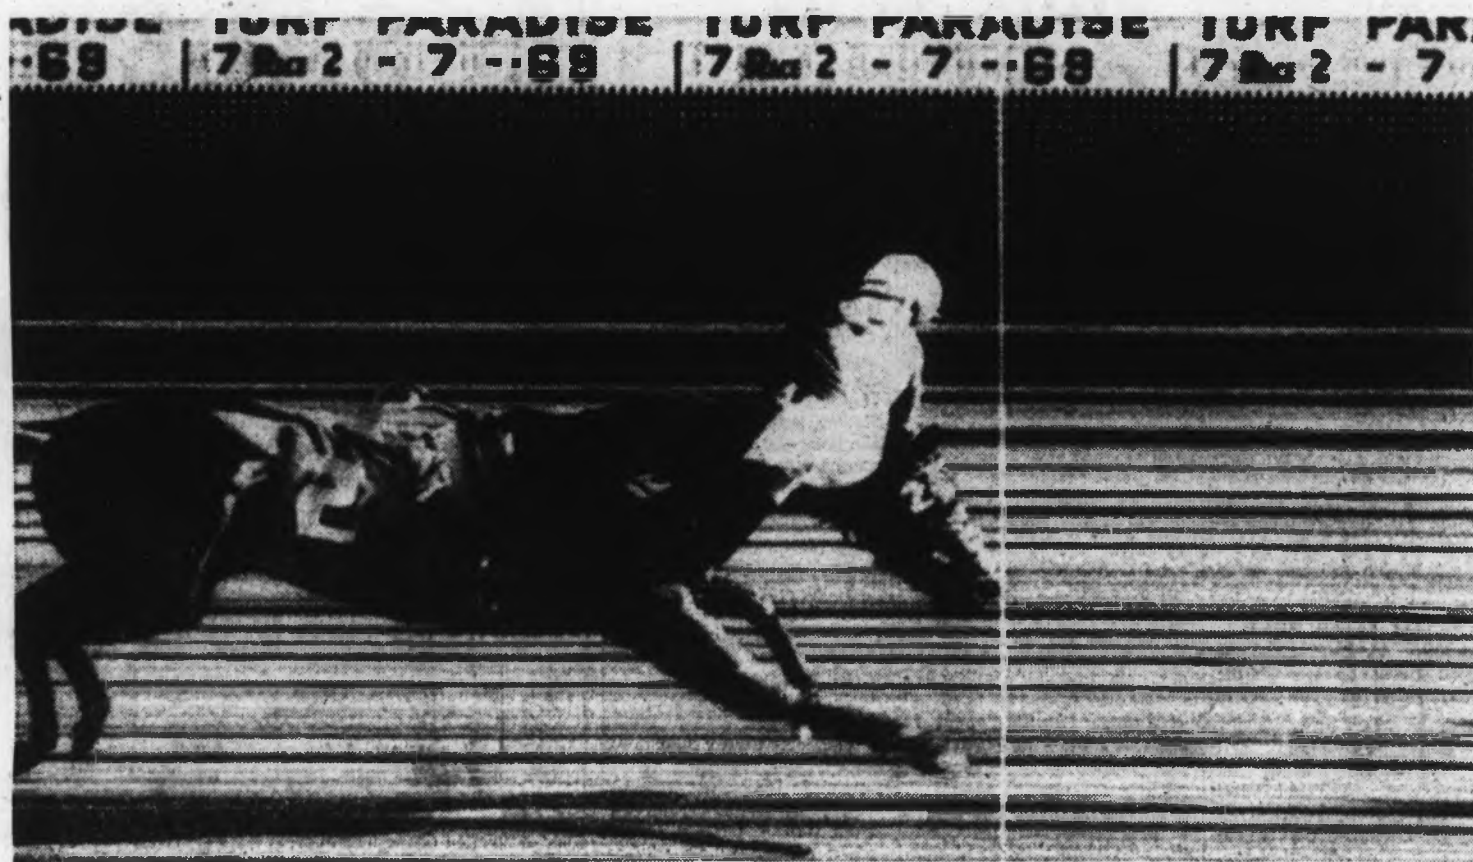

"This is on the line," he said, "and if this kind of country doesn't work, Canada will wither away and I just won't have a job."

Trudeau said he didn't intend to resign just because one, two or even five premiers don't agree with what he is doing.

"I am used to working in the opposition," he said. "And I believe in this concept for Canada. I will fight for it long and hard."

At another point in his chat, Trudeau said he doesn't quit easily and those who want him to, should slow down. He would see his four-year mandate through to the end.

Soviets Condemned

Italian Reds Back Czechs

BOLOGNA, Italy (AP)—Luigi Longo, secretary-general of the largest Communist party in the western world, told a wildly applauding audience of nearly 5,000 comrades Saturday that his party condemns Soviet actions in Czechoslovakia.

In a major speech opening the 12th national congress of the Italian party, Longo also rejected Soviet attempts to blame "imperialistic" actions of the West for the plight of Czechoslovakia.

'PRECIOUS PROPERTY'

The veteran 68-year-old Red leader aligned his party with Czechoslovak leaders and declared: "Their authority is a precious property for the Czech people."

Longo's praise of the Czechoslovak liberalization program and denunciation of the Soviet-bloc invasion to halt it brought loud applause from most of the 1,000 Italian delegates and 4,000 observers including a delegation from Prague, as they sat beneath a red hammer and sickle flag.

GRIM SILENCE

But the three-man delegation from Moscow and representatives of other eastern bloc countries sat in grim silence.

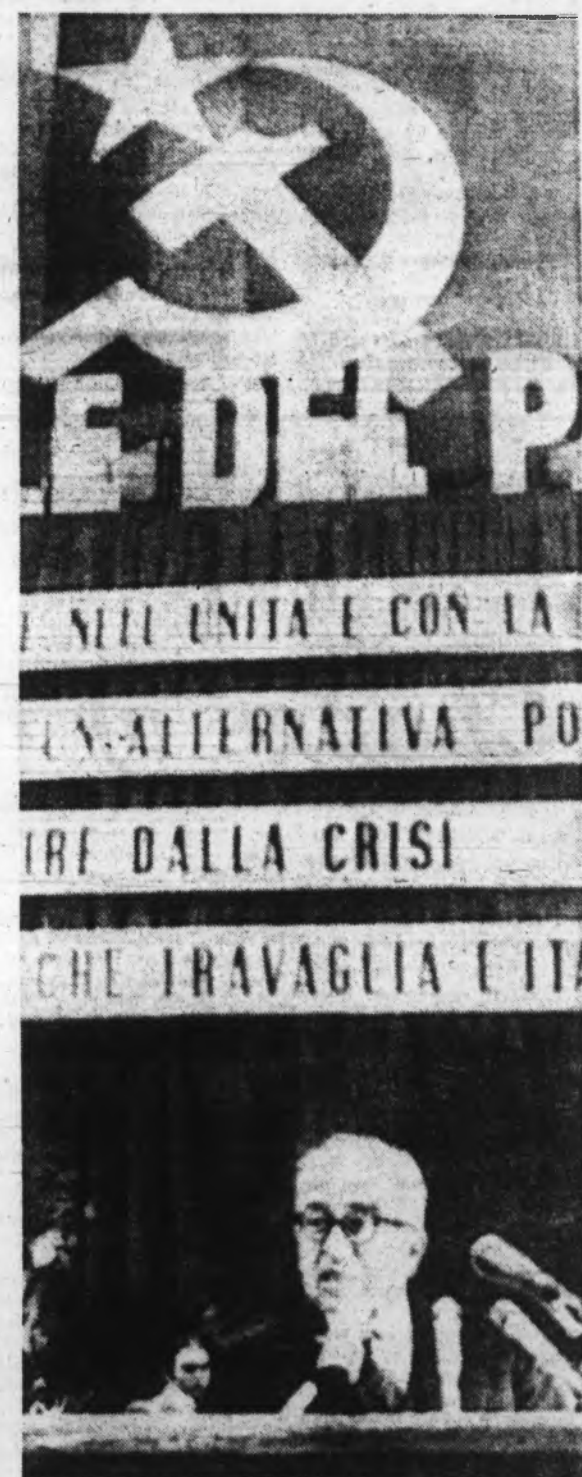

The Red leader rapped propping and anarchist agitators in Italy and promised that his party would seek access to power through legal "constitutional" methods.

Longo declared, however, that Italy's Communist party, with its 8,500,000 voters making it the second largest in the country, would resort to violence if any rightists attempt a coup or if Italy's membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization should lead the nation into a war "against its will."

MORE CRITICISM

Meanwhile, in Bucharest, Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu has publicly denounced the principle of "limited sovereignty" laid down by Soviet Communist leader Leonid Brezhnev to justify the invasion of Czechoslovakia, it was disclosed Saturday.

Ceausescu, addressing a national conference of teachers Friday night, said "limited sovereignty" is unMarxist and an attempt to justify past mistakes.

FILIPINO FERRY SINKS

MANILA, Philippines (AP)—Delayed reports from the southern Philippines said today that an inter-island ferry with possibly more than 100 passengers capsized near Zamboanga.

Eleven bodies were recovered and 62 passengers reported safe.

The boat, the Cotabato III, was said to have capsized Thursday night. Search parties were still looking for the missing.

Bonn Electors Barred

BERLIN (AP)—Communist East Germany Sunday banned all travel to and from West Berlin by members of the West German parliament, West German state legislators and other officials connected with the presidential electoral college meeting March 5.

The press office of the chairman of the East Berlin ministers council, Willy Stoph, made the announcement. It was reported by the official East German news agency ADN.

ADN said the ban, starting Feb. 15, also applied to members of the West German armed forces and transportation of construction materials for the planned federal assembly that will elect a new West German president.

ADN said that members and co-workers of the federal assembly also will be barred from entering East Berlin, and persons found violating the ban will be immediately expelled from the German Democratic Republic.

"Those who have committed other violations will be taken to account," ADN added.

Lindy of Kites Makes It

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP)—Columbus millionaire Ben Blinn was a happy man Saturday — but not because of his wealth.

It's because the 70-year-old outdoor advertising sign executive believes he has reached the pinnacle of another career — kite flying.

He said he received confirmation Friday that a plastic bottle attached to a kite he and a partner put in the air at Nantucket Island in June of 1967, has been found Jan. 31 at Fistrail Beach, Newquay, Cornwall, on the south coast of England.

He and Walter Scott, 71, a wealthy, retired candy maker, had launched 18 kites, each 4 or 5 feet tall, with a 2,000-foot string, from Nantucket.

They had studied tides and currents between Nantucket and Southampton and to each kite was attached a plastic bottle containing Blinn's address and a message asking that he be notified where it was found.

Also in the bottle was half of a $1 bill. Blinn said that he received a letter Friday from John C. Orel of Cornwall reporting finding the bottle, and listing the serial number on the half bill. They match the half Blinn holds, the latter said.

Blinn recalled Saturday his kite-flying hobby relates to his youth when he said he was "desperately poor" and had promised himself that "if I ever get rich I'm going to have plenty of kites and a fountain."

He added the fountain, he said because then only rich men in town had one. "Now I've got two," he said

Saturday. He said he and Scott are making plans to go to England and collect the evidence.

Weather Permitting

Boeing's Behemoth to Fly Today

EVERETT, Wash. (AP)—Should the weatherman smile, and all other factors be "go," a historic flight will start at Paine Field, today.

About 2½ hours later, after a cruise of the Puget Sound area and perhaps a brief probe over the Cascades to the east, depending again on the weather, test pilot Jack Waddell will bring the world's largest commercial airliner back to the plant where it was put together.

The event will be the maiden flight of the Boeing 747, a superjet which can carry 490 passengers, three times the number who can ride in airliners in use now, at a cruising speed of 625 miles an hour.

In a way, the first flight of the $20,000,000 jumbo jet marks an anniversary.

Just a little more than 10 years ago, the commercial jet age came in on the wings of a Boeing 707 when it carried 111 passengers from New York to Paris on a scheduled flight.

Waddell put the gigantic 747 through its paces on the ground the past week. He steered it in series of "S" turns and finally pushed the throttles of the four huge engines forward enough so the 255-ton plane was rolling 160 miles an hour, not much under takeoff speed.

Some time ago he said the colossus, which can fly non-stop 6,000 miles, would "fly like an angel" and be safe "as a church." After the taxi tests, Waddell was as pleased as before. "She handles beautifully," he said. "We're ready, and the plane's ready."

Hijacking Solution for Free

UP, UP AND AWAY: The hijacking of planes to Cuba has the airlines of the world in a tizzy, especially those that fly along the eastern seaboard of the United States. Pointing guns at the heads of pilots and saying, "Take me to Fidel," has become the order of the day. The pilots are upset and the airlines are out of pocket. Here, going for a song, is a solution to the whole mess.

Buy ads in all the coastal papers saying there will be free flights to Cuba on Tuesdays and Thursdays, leaving from Miami airport. Better run the ads in English and Spanish.

The flights would be at no cost to the passengers, but they would be just one way. To add to the fun, the trippers would have to agree to being searched and their luggage checked for weapons.

Once on board, the trippers would be issued with plastic guns in realistic designs, and they could run up and down the aisles firing caps at each other.

The pilot would be safe behind a steel bulkhead and there would be just the one stop, in Havana. If Castro didn't want anyone, he would have to ship them back at his expense. The free run would cut out all the danger and it would be far cheaper than the hijack runs. It may sound crazy, but until they try it, don't knock it.

ON A STRING: Last year this space was devoted to the game of marbles but who knows how to Skin the Cat, Shoot the Gun or Rock the Baby. If you do, chances are you are a top hand in the Yo-Yo game.

Man about Yo-Yos is Al Gallo of Toronto, who has been in town to promote the game. He can remember when John and Keith Olson went on stage in the Atlas Theatre to compete for top prize on the local circuit. The same house is now the Coronet.

John was the best in town, according to Mr. Gallo, but his string broke and Keith won the top prize of a war bond. The old toy is still going strong. They are made in Sweden and sold in Canada by Mr. Gallo, who says this is the only item on the toy counter that comes with live instruction, not just a pamphlet on how to play.

How long has the toy been around? The Duke of Windsor was taught how to spin a Yo-Yo by a Regina man in the early 30s.

They once cost 25 cents, but now top price is 99 cents.

BILL THOMAS

The government's approach to the conference, he said, is flexible. All subjects can be discussed, and the meeting is more likely to be like a seminar — with all parties learning from each other — than like a debate in which parties take strongly-held opposing views.

The Prairie premiers went on record this last week that tax transfers should be the No. 1 issue of the conference. Trudeau has vowed there will be no backsliding on progress towards bilingualism.

All provinces are being represented by their premiers except Saskatchewan, whose Premier Ross Thatcher is ill and will be represented by David Stewart, provincial treasurer. Trudeau has taken the position that tax matters Scotch. He was then governor of Alaska and now he is in Richard Nixon's cabinet. Good mixers go a long way.

GONE FISHING: Manager of the Undersea Gardens, Peter Tredgett, is sitting a round chewing his fingers waiting for the renovations to the attraction to be completed.

All his fish are in wire and steel cages in local waters, waiting to go back on show. He is worried that small boys who like fishing will find out where they are and bait their hooks. Divers are busy keeping the fish fed, but a bit of bait might land a whopper.

POOR TIMING: The University of Victoria is getting bigger, but not so big that communications should break down totally. How could two departments in one faculty plan major events for the same night?

The Fine Arts School has music and theatre divisions. The music division booked the famed Borodin Quartet and the theatre division decided to open Playboys of the Western World, both on Thursday night.

FEATURE ATTRACTION: The word is that when the Hillside Shopping Centre expands to the second stage, there will be a new Zeller's store and also a movie house. The new theatre will be two houses back-to-back, so that two first-run movies can be shown at the same time.

Canada, Not Trudeau, 'on Line'

should be discussed in the framework of constitutional reform — whether the powers to tax and spend need redistribution, rather than whether Ottawa should turn over more of its tax dollars to the provinces. The agenda calls for discussion of basic constitutional principles.

Ottawa proposes writing a new preamble to the British North America Act of 1867, setting out the objectives and reasons for Canada's existence. Trudeau also suggested forming a committee of attorneys-general to work on writing a basic bill of rights into the constitution.

The broad objectives of bilingualism — that all Canadians should be able to deal at least with government offices and courts across the country in the language of their choice, English or French — were agreed to at last year's constitutional conference.

Some provinces with small numbers of French-speaking residents, particularly in western Canada, now fear achievement of such a goal will be too expensive and want it modified, or given a lower priority.

Ottawa is giving no encouragement to provincial demands for more money from the federal treasury. Finance Minister E. J. Benson, backed by the cabinet, takes the position that the provinces are free to levy additional taxes if they wish to take the responsibility.

How long will Trudeau give himself to find out if bilingualism is a dead or an alive concept?

"I can't say," he replied. "It will be a long educational process. Trudeau's government is accused of rigidity in its relations with the provincial premiers.

Saturday night, he tried to create the image that he is really much more flexible. His government, he said, was willing to "discuss anything, anytime, anywhere with anyone."

However, there is a gathering consensus in Ottawa that the conference will achieve nothing or very little.

Trudeau himself predicted that it would be "more of a seminar than a debate" — with everyone trying to understand the other's point of view.

The leaders would compare "theoretical best solutions" to achieve an exciting concept for Canada, to find out how Canada can live together.

In advance, it seems that there will be agreement to disagree, and the officials who have been meeting since the last conference, in February, will quietly back to work until the next one.

Former prime ministers Lester Pearson and John Diefenbaker have been invited to attend as special observers. Trudeau said other observers will include the commissioners and one elected member from the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. It is the first time an elected person from the northern territories has been invited to attend these conferences.

Commissioner Stuart Hodgson and David Searle of Yellowknife will represent the N.W.T.; Commissioner James Smith and councillor J. K. McKinnon of Dawson will represent the Yukon.

Delegates from the cabinet, in addition to Trudeau, will be Justice Minister John Turner, Paul Martin, government leader in the Senate, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp, Manpower Minister Allan Rock, Finance Minister E. J. Benson, Rural Development Minister Jean Marchand, Health Minister John Munro, State Secretary Gerard Pelletier and Consumer Affairs Minister Ron Basford.

As well, 19 officials and advisers are attached to the federal delegation.

Peace Try Falls Short Of Success

By DAVE McINTOSH

OTTAWA (CP) — Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield walked knowingly into the federal-provincial constitutional maelstrom last week.

He was trying to stop Ottawa and the provinces blackjacking each other on the related issues of money and constitutional reform, even though it would appear to his political advantage to permit the mayhem to continue unabated.

He made his move — apparently unsuccessful — almost on the eve of the second constitutional summit conference, which opens Monday.

Some of the provinces have been saying that they will not let the federal government proceed with constitutional reform in the vital area of language rights unless Ottawa gives them more money to help them finance programs they regard as essential.

Ottawa, on the other hand, has said it will not make proposals for redistribution of powers — and these include taxing and spending powers — until it gets provincial agreement on language rights and other reforms.

Stanfield has long felt that Ottawa has not sufficiently consulted the provinces on economic problems affecting them as well as the central authority.

POISON THREAT

He believes a rigid Ottawa position on allocation of tax revenues can poison the federal-provincial atmosphere in other fields — such as the constitution.

Thus he proposed Thursday that Ottawa hold up its estates tax bill until further consultation with the provinces and that it turn over part of the revenues from the new two-per-cent social development tax to the provinces.

Prime Minister Trudeau so far has stuck to his position that his government needs all the revenues from the new tax to balance the budget.

Finance Minister Edgar Benson has said repeatedly there just isn't any more money available to hand over to the provinces.

This week's conference will hopefully not be the last concerned with the constitution and Stanfield's general thesis, though not accepted now, may have an effect in the coming months.

So far, Alberta and Manitoba have been two of Ottawa's main opponents in its fight to obtain language rights for French-speaking Canadians in English Canada.

This has led to some talk here that Premier Walter Weir of Manitoba and Premier Harry Strom of Alberta do not really have a mandate from their electors.

Weir has been premier for more than a year without calling an election. Strom took over from former premier Ernest Manning in December.

The contrast is drawn that Trudeau called a federal election three days after he became prime minister last April 20 and campaigned basically on the issue of one Canada with equal rights for French- and English-speaking Canadians.

However, some Liberals here say Ottawa would be foolish to try to goad Weir and Strom into elections on the issue of language rights. On such an issue, the two premiers might score near-swaps which would boom-erang on Ottawa.

When the conference opens Monday, the recent federal-provincial shouting is expected to subside and coolness prevail. For how long is the question.

Your Good Health

Change of Pill Required

By G. T. THOSTESON, MD

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have tried taking birth control pills as prescribed by my doctor for painful menstrual periods, but I find that one of the side effects is a severe depression. I am wondering if another brand would help.—E.P.H.

It might. Smaller doses are appearing in some of the newer tablets. Change of brand as well as of dosage might help you.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: We are worried. Since my nephew, now 15, was three years old he has had an infected eye or ear about every six months. This time his eye is so swollen he can't open it.

The doctor said it is a staph infection. ACh anything but to prevent recurrences?—H.A.B. One method would be to have a laboratory culture made from the discharge from the eye or ear to identify the exact organs (or variety of staphylococcus germ) so a course of an appropriate antibiotic can be instituted.

There should also be a search for sites of focal infection, as in the nose, tonsils, adenoids, etc. Certainly ear and eye infections are dangerous enough so that every reasonable effort should be made to put an end to them.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I did something three years ago that scares me to think about. I baked under a sun lamp because of a cold, and now I wonder whether this could have affected my reproductive organs and interfered with fertility.—J.C.L. Prolonged, intense heat can temporarily diminish sperm production. When normal temperatures resume, sperm production returns to normal, so I strongly doubt that you have harmed yourself.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My son has had a long siege with acne. The doctor gave him two kinds of pills, Vitamin A and another which, I believe, was for hormone balance.

They were quite expensive, so my husband has discouraged the boy from refilling the prescriptions and decided to prescribe himself by telling him to cut out milk.

The boy has been in excellent health all his life and has averaged a quart of milk a day. At my husband's suggestion, he is now drinking no milk at all, just tea. I feel that since tea has no food value he is losing valuable proteins, etc. Do you think milk causes or advances acne?—M.V.

I think the chance of milk being involved in the acne is so remote as to be what you might call far-fetched. To keep peace in the family, maybe if the no-milk hotton doesn't show any results in, say, a month, your husband will give up on that kick.

Certainly the protein, as well as the calcium content, is important in the diet. If your husband is going on the theory that fat has anything to do with the matter, at least get him to permit low-fat or skim milk, so the boy will still get his calcium.

Terrorist Roundup Reported

Suicide Attacks Foiled

SAIGON (UPI) — South Vietnamese security forces Saturday reported arresting two Viet Cong suicide squads and foiling a plot to blow up national police headquarters and a runway at Saigon's Tan Son Nhut air base.

In war action, Viet Cong gunners shot down three U.S. helicopters and a jet fighter-bomber, killing eight Americans and wounding seven. Eight South Korean soldiers also were killed in the helicopter crashes.

New terror attacks were reported as the Tet, or lunar new year, holiday approached. Two American civilians were killed and a third wounded early Saturday when their jeep was ambushed 19 miles south of Saigon. Two Vietnamese civilians were hurt in Saigon when a bomb exploded under an American vehicle.

Col. Tran Van Hai, chief of the national police, announced the arrest of the Viet Cong commando teams and said they planned to attack his headquarters and Tan Son Nhut airbase prior to the end of the Tet period "to influence the Paris peace talks."

Spokesmen said the attack on Tan Son Nhut, a sprawling complex just outside Saigon, was to take place at night. The Viet Cong were preparing a detailed map of the base and had buried six automatic rifles, two antitank rocket launchers and a quantity of plastic explosives near the perimeter.

Tan Son Nhut was a prime target in the communists' nationalwide Tet offensive a year ago.

Officials said the commando team planning to blow up national police headquarters in Saigon proper was arrested while meeting in a theatre in the suburb of Gia Dinh. Police said its members included a woman and a "professor" and that weapons and ammunition were hidden at his home.

The civilians killed in the ambush near Saigon were employed by the U.S. Army contractor. The jeep was moving through a rubber plantation area shortly after dawn Saturday when the attackers opened fire with automatic weapons. Two of the unarmed civilians were killed trying to escape, and the third was seriously burned by a rocket propelled grenade fired at the jeep.

Capital Not Target

SAIGON (UPI) — High-ranking U.S. intelligence sources said Saturday communist troops are expected to start a new offensive soon, but are not planning full-scale attacks on Saigon.

Informants said the main thrust will be on numerous province capitals and military bases around Saigon.

Intelligence reports indicate that Viet Cong and North Vietnamese troops will not be ready to spring the offensive prior to the Tet holidays beginning Feb. 17.

The Viet Cong has ordered a seven-day cease-fire for the Tet period, and South Vietnamese officials have agreed to this "in principle."

Last, Last Push Ridiculed

UMUAHIA, Biafra (AP) — Biafran officers are contending that the Nigerian army has begun what Biafran chief of staff Maj. Gen. Philip Effiong calls the "last, last, final, push."

The sarcasm reflects official Biafran skepticism over Nigeria's ability to end the civil war quickly with a final offensive to Umuahia, the capital.

The view seems to have filtered down among the people because a feared Nigerian advance did not materialize after the fall of two other major towns last August — Aba and Owerri.

SEVERAL DAYS But for the past several days, according to official Biafran war reports, the Nigerians have been steadily advancing toward a possibly important linkup operation in the northwest.

The reported advance is on a paved, four-lane highway from Abagana to Onitsha, two towns long held by federal forces.

By the highway one can pass Nnewi, home town of the Biafran leader Lt. Col. C. Odumegwu Ojukwu, and after a total of 40 miles can be at Airstrip Annabelle. That is Biafra's only link with the outside world, and its capture or destruction would place a noose around the neck of the secessionist state.

Divisive Issue

THE PROPOSAL of the prime minister that the monarchical system of government should be retained in this country is likely to be viewed in some quarters as a bone for persons of that persuasion to chew on while the federal government pursues what it obviously believes the more important issue of language rights.

Mr. Trudeau made his personal position perfectly clear when he told correspondents that he would never settle for anything less than the enshrining of linguistic rights in the constitution. And as long as he is prime minister, that must be the policy of the government.

It should be understood that the question of language rights is already covered by the constitution, under the terms of the British North America Act of 1867, and clarified by the amendment of 1949, where the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures is explicitly confirmed.

Moreover, by the 1949 amendment, the terms of the BNA Act with respect to language rights are specifically exempted from federal tampering.

Section 91 provides for the amendment of the constitution "except . . . as regards the use of the English or the French language."

Mr. Trudeau is "a little disturbed," as he puts it, that some premiers seem to have forgotten "the consensus" of last year's federal-provincial conference that French-speaking Canadians should have language rights in English Canada equal to those of English-speaking Canadians in Quebec.

In the first place consensus means agreement, and agreement was not achieved in the sense the prime minister implies. The suggestion of mutual language rights to be enjoyed by those of either tongue got sympathetic attention, but there were reservations.

Moreover, the various political parties of Quebec are concerned with devices to give preference to French-speaking persons in every walk of life. And in the case of some local authorities, the right of choice of the language of instruction has been denied.

It cannot be contended that non-French speakers do not have a handicap in business or in the professions in Quebec. Their activities are obviously restricted, and it is a fact they must face. The same difficulty would be experienced by a non-English speaker elsewhere in the country. But this is no argument for the universal two-language requirement upon which the federal authority seems to be bent: In government, the armed forces, the courts and every nationally operated establishment.

Ontario accepts the bilingual concept of Canada in principle. But it takes the point that "in practice" it will only be necessary to provide French language services where the size of the minority—10 per cent or more—is large enough to warrant it. This is very generous. But the decision is Ontario's and not Ottawa's.

"Canada's survival remains in issue," Mr. Trudeau has warned. And he is right. But it is difficult to conceive of any action more likely to be divisive than the ramming of a federal languages statute down the throats of the provinces.

Home-Tax Loans

THE BRITISH COLUMBIA government would do well to take an interest in the proposal for helping retired persons to retain their homes put forward in the legislature by Oak Bay's member, Mr. Allan Cox.

Mr. Cox's concern is for those older citizens on modest, fixed incomes who are pushed by rising property taxes into selling their homes. His suggestion is that the government establish a fund from which the taxes of qualified applicants—retired persons without sufficient disposable income to meet the taxes—would be paid to the municipalities concerned, on a loan basis. The money would be repaid to the government on the eventual sale of the homes, being a charge on the property.

Similar proposals have been advanced by others in the past, usually related to direct action of the municipal authorities: Let the municipalities allow small-income householders with sufficient equity in their homes to postpone payment of taxes, with only a low-interest penalty, until the homes are ultimately sold.

This method, too, could be put within the power of the municipalities by the provincial government, but with the disadvantages that there undoubtedly would be disparity among municipalities and that municipal financing would be more difficult than provincial establishment of a fund for the granting of property-tax loans.

As Mr. Cox observes, his suggestion is in line with the Social Credit government's policy of encouraging home ownership; the scheme would hardly tie up an inordinate amount of provincial money, and it would alleviate social distress and disruption.

MR. CLIFF DOWNEY: I was beginning to worry. Mr. Speaker, in case I had undergone some strange metamorphosis which had possibly rendered me invisible . . . Can the acting minister explain to the house why the cheapest form of mail delivery, the post office box, has been doubled in price while the more expensive form of mail delivery to residential letterboxes and rural route boxes pays only the additional postage that is required under the new rates?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not only visible but also audible, and he should place his question on the order paper in order to make it readable.

Tug-of-War in the Federal Cabinet

By LUBOR J. ZINK from Ottawa

FINANCE Minister Edgar Benson is committed to a balanced budget. Whatever slim chance he has of balancing the books depends on his hanging on to all the existing sources of federal revenue and on containing all pressures for new spending.

Transport Minister Paul Hellyer is committed to expansion of the housing program in an effort to forestall further deterioration of the already critical shortage of decent accommodation at prices the average Canadian family can afford.

To get anywhere with his scheme, Mr. Hellyer must try to defeat Mr. Benson's objective.

Although the report of the Hellyer task force on housing and urban development carefully avoids demands for additional federal funds, it crosses Mr. Benson's narrow path by calling for the removal of federal and provincial sales taxes on building materials.

Mr. Benson, who made his budget calculations before this revenue-reducing proposal was made, has already vetoed the idea. The federal share of the sales taxes on building material represents a considerable sum which the finance minister cannot hope to replace from other revenue sources.

Since both Benson and Hellyer can be expected to fight hard for their respective objectives which cannot be reconciled within the existing budgetary structure, the cabinet, and ultimately the prime minister, face the difficult task of deciding whether to sacrifice the uncertain prospect of a balanced budget to the uncertain prospect of cheaper housing, or vice versa.

Both Benson and Hellyer can, and undoubtedly will, use strong political arguments in support of their positions.

Armed with the report of his task force, which has been shocked by the squalor of the urban slums, Mr. Hellyer will point out the political danger the Trudeau regime would be courting if it failed to forestall a further deterioration of the housing crisis.

People who voted the Trudeau ticket in anticipation of some magic fallout of instant social improvements from the prime minister's Just Society slogan, could easily turn against the government unless they see tangible signs of material benefits from the new regime.

Even the slightest drop in housing costs would be such a sign.

Mr. Benson will argue that nothing is more important for the country's economic health in the current climate of recurring international financial crises than a balanced budget.

From his point of view any tinkering with the tax structure that could hamper his quest for the image of Canada's economic stability and efficient management would be irresponsible, especially when the effect of such tinkering on the cost of housing would, in all probability, be negligible in the immediate future.

Besides, hasn't the prime minister publicly and repeatedly committed himself to a balanced budget? The electorate may have swallowed one failure of the new government to fulfill its pledge, but another failure could cause incalculable political damage.

Mr. Benson, who vowed to quit as finance minister if his budget is thrown out of balance by another big deficit, may even threaten to resign forthwith unless the cabinet upholds his veto of Hellyer's proposal to remove the 11 per cent tax on building materials.

While I do not pretend to know what the prime minister's decision will be on this issue, my prediction is that Mr. Trudeau will basically side with his finance minister. He may try to find a compromise solution in tacking with Mr. Hellyer's idea that the 11 per cent tax could be removed in stages, starting with rebates on materials used "in housing of modest cost," but if Mr. Benson proves with figures that this would still upset the budget without appreciably reducing building costs, Mr. Trudeau is likely to shrug off the rebate scheme.

After all, his pledge to achieve a balanced budget was given to the whole nation in pretty specific terms and is therefore of greater political significance than the vague promises that something will be done in due course to alleviate the housing crisis which is acutely felt by only a segment of the population.

Should this prediction prove to be essentially correct, Mr. Hellyer won't suffer any serious political setback, for he has made it clear in his presentation of the report of the task force on housing that the shortage of decent accommodation for the low and middle income brackets cannot be licked unless all his recommendations are accepted and implemented in their totality.

Even then, he warned, the anticipated beneficial affects could not be expected to start really showing before the mid-1970s.

This provides an escape hatch for the Trudeau regime, for whatever happens to the housing report in the cabinet, the public has already been notified that the housing crisis is too complex a problem to be solved, or at least substantially alleviated, during the lifespan of the present government.

In housing, as in practically everything else, the undefined promise of a Just Society will thus remain a nebulous dream, ready to be used with unscrupulous flourish as a whetting agent of the ever-rising popular expectations in another election.

Meanwhile, most of our poor families will continue to live in overcrowded slums, some of them not far from the spacious residence of the bachelor prime minister.

The Hot Seat of Decision

By MARQUIN CHILDS

THE web of the U.S. military-industrial-political complex is so tangled that the role of David Packard as deputy secretary of defence has caused hardly a ripple. What would have been unthinkable 15 years ago is taken for granted today.

Packard and his wife own 3,584,950 shares of the Hewlett-Packard Co. (minus 30,000 made as an irrevocable gift) which sold last week at $82 a share.

For Hewlett-Packard's last fiscal year total orders for the company's complex electronic devices were $280,000,000, of which $100,000,000 was either directly or indirectly in government contracts, largely with the department of defence.

When Packard came before the Senate armed services committee for his confirmation hearing the questioning was perfunctory, if not downright subservient. Members of the committee seemed overawed by a man who had begun from nothing and made a very great fortune by his own ingenuity and drive.

There was, however, a fleetingly glimpse backward at what had been the mores of a simpler day; in these matters an age of innocence. When Charles E. Wilson, president of General Motors, was nominated for secretary of defence by the new Republican president, Dwight Eisenhower, in 1953 he was required to sell $2,500,000 in General Motors stock. GM was reported at that time to have more defence contracts than any other corporation.

Packard put his Hewlett-Packard and other holdings in a trust over which during his tenure in the Pentagon he would have no control and the income of which would go charity.

One detail of Packard's involvement in the complex the armed services committee ignored. For five years he was a director of the General Dynamics Corp. With a holding of only 2,000 shares of General Dynamics in an extraordinary rich and diverse portfolio it is safe to assume that he had little influence on the company's decisions. Nevertheless, General Dynamics and the TFX plane dispute—into which $8 to $9 billion has already gone, with the charge that the services consider the aircraft uneconomical—factory is one of the sorest spots in the Pentagon-congressional relationship.

When it comes to conflict of interest in the military-industrial-political web Congress is no model of virtue. Some of the rarest examples are in the record of Senate and House members quarrel over where military installations and defence plants shall be located.

A notorious case history was that of the late Sen. Robert S. Kerr of Oklahoma. A powerful member of the Senate's club within a club and a close ally of Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson, Kerr never missed an opportunity to promote government leases for his huge uranium holdings. With his large oil holdings his high rank on the Senate finance committee was insurance against any upstart who might want to change the 27 per cent depletion allowance for oil income.

Georgia has fared so well with defence installations and contracts, with domination for many years of the House armed services committee, and Sen. Richard Russell, chairman of the armed services, on the Senate side, that the joke was the state had become so overloaded as to be top-heavy. Ranking 15th in population, Georgia is 10th in the percentage of military contracts.

Now comes a test of putting both the Pentagon and Congress on the hot seat of decision. Congress approved last year $1.2 billion for deployment of an anti-ballistic missile system in the coming fiscal year. As this spending multiplies it touches every large defence contractor not excepting, one assumes, Hewlett-Packard.

From a number of elites out in the country comes a roar of protest over where the army proposes to put the ABM. Together with the insistence of leading scientists that the ABM is futile and probably already obsolete, this latest spiral in the nuclear arms race may be checked. That is the test for Congress and for the United States.

Soviet Pedestal Lost

From The Ottawa Journal

THE shots fired at the Moscow motorcade of cosmonaut heroes and high communist officials fortunately did no real damage. What a tragedy it would have been if the shooting had taken any lives in that moment of national rejoicing. That the Russians revealed the assassination attempt at all, shows what a close call it was that of the late Sen. Robert S. Kerr of Oklahoma. A powerful member of the Senate's club criticizing other countries which have suffered the assassination of leaders and heroes. It should have been brought home to Moscow that a few sick minds do not necessarily mean that a whole society is sick.

The Russians were quick to describe the man who did the shooting as schizophrenic. Undoubtedly he was. Russia should not be indicted for its madmen. Neither should any other nation.

The Day Before Yesterday

A Different View Of Victoria Harbor

This is one of a continuing series of articles condensed from the author's forthcoming book, "The Day Before Yesterday". (All rights reserved.)

By AINMJE HELMCKEN

IT may not be in my lifetime, although in this day of speed who knows what is in store, but certainly within the lifetime of the present younger generation, the giants of the ocean will require — demand is actually a better word — accommodation on the west coast of Vancouver Island. A superport in that area will save a minimum of three days to one week in turnaround time. In turn this will mean an extra two or three cargoes per year for each ship, with commensurate increment.

Fed by a continuous flow of newly developed railroad equipment, or possibly by bulk shipment by pipeline, ships will gobble up a trainload as easily and almost as quickly as the skipper eats his dinner.

And what will be Victoria's role while all these developments take place? As a large satellite port, equipped to service the needs of these giant freighters, such as provisions and the mechanics to service their requirements, it should be prepared. A giant drydock capable of handling the largest ships afloat must be built somewhere. Why not in this part of the world?

The harbor will then be bustling with freighters and passenger craft. This then will be the renewal of the plan to revitalize the harbor.

We kicked opportunity in the teeth around the turn of the century, and in my opinion the failure of the powers of that day speeded the demise of shipping within our harbor.

All cities and communities need men capable of dreaming the big dream; realities are usually the culmination of a dream from which they have been extracted.

Into our harbor of what might have been came Thomas C. Sorby, a British architect and civil engineer, arriving here in 1897, having been previously engaged in work for the CPR at Montreal and Vancouver. In Vancouver his work as an architect is still in evidence in the well-known St. James' Church in the East End of the city.

From the day of his arrival, Victoria was home to him. The harbor completely fascinated him, and he spent hours walking around its perimeter studying its needs and the means of developing it into the finest small harbor on the Pacific coast.

A brilliant and competent man in his profession, his contacts with the mayor and council would have defeated a man of lesser determination.

For instance, in the early 1890s, council advertised a competition for the best design for a permanent crossing and replacement for James' Bay bridge. First prize was $350 and second $250. There was a joker, however. The winning design must be capable of being built within the sum of $80,000.

From a number of designs submitted, Mr. Sorby's, entered under the sobriquet "Coeur Fidele," was declared the winner. The design was hailed by many competent engineers to be both imaginative and practical at the same time.

Secretly, however, the council had a mild case of cold feet when it came time to laying out the money for the project as well as the design.

The plans were turned over to the city engineer for study, and his estimates took council off the hook. He said it couldn't have been built within the prescribed sum of money. There it ended, or rather, council thought it had ended. No chance was to be given the contestants for another engineer's opinion.

They Never Paid

For seven long years Mr. Sorby tried in vain to collect his prize money, but council always found an excuse not to pay him. This is until a special committee of the council appointed in the seventh year to investigate the claim, reported.

They shook the council to its very foundations as they reported Mr. Sorby's claim to be justified. But they never did pay him in spite of the report. They held on to his plans however. This I know. We have them in the city archives today.

It appears that many of his ideas were used in the eventual land utilization plan for the Empress Hotel.

An analysis of the cost of building the Causeway shows his plan could have been implemented within the $80,000 limit.

Despite his experience with council he continued his investigation of the harbor.

Here was a perfect gem of a small harbor, beautifully located but destined to become an unsightly conglomeration of decaying warehouses and wharves because Victorians, in general, could not see the rewards which Vancouver was making into the shipping business.

All were too complacent, too fat, and lacking in imagination. By 1896 he had completed, at his own expense, the grand plan for harbor development.

He proposed to build a dam across the harbor mouth from Macaulay Point on the Esquimalt side, to what we now call the "Outer Wharves". The harbor would have then been pumped out and, with the help of 5,000 men, been deepened to provide 30 feet at low water.

All material would have been piled around the perimeter, navigational hazards removed, including all Laurel Point where the BAPCO plant now stands. (Then it was known locally as Seid's Point.)

The scheme required the dredging of 107 acres as well as reclaiming an additional 70 acres. A usable harbor frontage of two miles would have been created. Costs were estimated to be $3,500,000 for the main harbor with an additional $750,000 for that portion north of Johnson Street. The work could have been performed in nine months. Financing at 3 1/2 per cent was available against the Dominion government's guarantee of interest.

Even then Sorby was not discouraged. With the help of leading men of the shipping and manufacturing businesses, he formed the Victoria Harbor Development Association and until his life came to an end on Nov. 16, 1924, he continued the fight for an intelligent plan for the harbor.

His insight into the needs of this area prompted the Dominion government to engage his services in the preparation of plans for Ogden Point shipping facilities. This is his monument.

One cannot help but wonder what the condition of the port might be today had the Sorby scheme been implemented.

Would we have been reduced to a mere trickle of ferries, scaplanes and tugs as we are today?

The government agreed to supply a suction dredge free of charge.

It was truly imaginative. It was not the plan which sank the project, however.

Mayor Charles Redfern's council of 1890 took the plan under consideration. Committees were appointed consisting of members of the council and leading business men, such committees to have power to engage expert assistance. There was no trouble in filling the committees for the city had suddenly become conscious of its shortcomings.

Early committees reported favorably, approving the provision of funds for Mr. Sorby to visit Ottawa and seek government endorsement.

It has been said that a camel is but the work of a committee appointed to design a horse. Mr. Sorby could certainly testify to this.

A change of mayors and council. New men on the harbor committee. Things began to happen, not all favorable.

The engineering committee called a meeting for April 4, 1900. Here is a verbatim report of this brief but stormy meeting:

"The chairman asked Mr. Sorby for a plan of the project, and this was submitted. Mr. (B. W.) Pearce said he was sure the plan was not the same as the original. Mr. Sorby declared it was and warmly resented Mr. Pearce's insinuations that it was not.

"Mr. Sorby remarked 'that as my word is not taken I shall no longer remain at this meeting. You have made statements that are absolutely without foundation'."

Thus the first organized attempt to develop the harbor came to a sudden end. Alderman Thomas Brydon stood firmly by Mr. Sorby and did not hesitate to publicly accuse the mayor (Charles Hayward) and Mr. Pearce of duping the scheme for fear there would be a deficit in operation.

Even then Sorby was not discouraged. With the help of leading men of the shipping and manufacturing businesses, he formed the Victoria Harbor Development Association and until his life came to an end on Nov. 16, 1924, he continued the fight for an intelligent plan for the harbor.

His insight into the needs of this area prompted the Dominion government to engage his services in the preparation of plans for Ogden Point shipping facilities. This is his monument.

One cannot help but wonder what the condition of the port might be today had the Sorby scheme been implemented.

Would we have been reduced to a mere trickle of ferries, scaplanes and tugs as we are today?

It's Time the System Solicited Outside Views

Education 'House Designed by Carpenters'

In education democracy remains an uncomfortable notion and it's doubtful that public education will ever be truly democratic.

There's no bitterness in the above statement. It's just a matter of record.

Ask yourself two questions. As a child, what voice did you have in your own education? Practically none, right?

Had you raised the issue, even in university, you would have been told to keep quiet, "get an education," and then share in decision-making when you were an adult.

Second question. Now that you are an adult and probably a parent, what voice do you have in the education of your child?

Uh? What's that? Practically none? Right.

If you should wish to have your small say in shaping fundamental education policy you don't even know where to begin unless you are already within the educational establishment.

The average parent will never be hugely interested in formulating educational goals or drawing up curriculum. He hasn't the training or time. It's a job for experts.

The question, then, is: how well are we represented by the experts who do get the job?

Not very well, I suggest.

Briefly, here's how the system works. The Public Schools Act gives authority in the field of curriculum to the Council of Public Instruction (the provincial cabinet) and the minister of education.

In effect it rests with civil servants because the cabinet and even the minister can't possibly concern themselves with all the details. This was demonstrated dramatically 18 months ago when that famous four-letter word slipped into a high school English text, forcing Education Minister Peterson to admit he hadn't read it.

The education department has two top curriculum committees, one for elementary and one for secondary education. They are composed of department officials, university education professors and well-qualified public school teachers.

Beneath these "professional committees," as they are known, are a varying number of curriculum committees which handle specific tasks.

They develop new courses, revise old ones, pick textbooks and write curriculum guides for teachers.

In the 1967-68 school year there were 26 of these committees.

They are composed of teachers nominated by the B.C. Teachers' Federation and university faculty.

BILL STAVDAL

In addition, two outstanding teachers are loaned to the department each year to advise the director of curriculum.

***

The specific curriculum committee presents its work to the professional committee above it, which checks and passes a new course on up to the top for final approval. Then the schools get it.

From beginning to end, at every step, the whole process has been conducted entirely by teachers.

Right-away-quick let's say it: this is not an attack on teachers. The curriculum committee people I've talked with have all been well-regarded and eminently qualified. The new courses being introduced in the schools are vast improvements over the stuff pushed at us adults a decade or two ago.

***

But it's absurd that our entire education system should be decided by just one segment of the population — the people who also administer it.

It's like leaving the design of a house to the carpenters.

Where is the representation from labor and business, from the universities outside the education faculties, from assorted societies and private citizens?

The B.C. School Trustees' Association has one representative on the curriculum committees. He's a former teacher.

James Campbell, president of the BCSTA, has said that it's fundamentally wrong to put all decisions on education completely in the hands of the people who administer it. Trustees should have far greater representation as the voice of the public, he feels.

My own feeling is that trustees should be better represented but aren't necessarily good people for the actual job of curriculum revision.

Far better, it would seem, would be a permanent agency of the department with the task of listening to the public, seeking out informed opinion and keeping an ear to the groundswell of social movements.

It could assess the ideas of idealistic humanists who see education in terms of personal development, and of hardnosed businessmen who view education only as job training.

The agency — or committee or commission or whatever — would act as a sort of continuing royal commission on education, providing the philosophical background against which curriculum would be drawn.

***

If teachers are to continue making curriculum, they should be fully aware of ideas other than their own. Right now there is no clear statement of what education aims at in this province. Perhaps there never should be a definitive statement but there ought to be outlines. More on this next week.

Nation's Survival More Important than One Man's Views

Bennett Won't Speak for All B.C. at Ottawa

Does B.C. really know what is going on in the background at the federal-provincial conference on the constitution which opens Monday?

Will the participants in that conference receive a true indication of the feelings of British Columbians on the vital issues that are to be discussed there?

These are two of the unanswered questions Premier Bennett is leaving behind as he flies to Ottawa.

To both the answer must be a qualified no.

In the first case, Mr. Bennett simply rejects any suggestion that there should be an investigation of any other form of government than the present federal system. He might be forgiven for not initiating a study of, say, a republican form of government. But why deny a move in this direction even exists?

After the premier and Justice Minister John Turner met privately here last Monday to discuss the federal and B.C. positions prior to the constitutional talks they met briefly with reporters.

"It's a myth," said Mr. Turner, when asked about the possibility of discussions on a republican form of government.

ment for Canada at the conference.

Mr. Bennett, on the same issue, said he had never discussed such a possibility with any federal or provincial minister.

***

Yet the briefing paper prepared by a continuing committee of federal and provincial officials appointed to study constitutional changes, made public across Canada on the day of Mr. Turner's visit, dealt in part with propositions relating to the alternatives of retaining the monarchical system or adopting a republican form of government.

The briefing paper said:

IAN STREET

"These propositions seem to indicate that while opposition to change exists in some parts of the country, other parts believe that serious consideration at least should be given to the alternative."

It's no secret that B.C. is opposed to change and this province's position paper, released Thursday, says flatly: "Canada's future can best be realized under a federal system of government."

Clearly, however, more than one other part of Canada believes that consideration should be given to the adoption of a republican form of government.

This raises the question: Is

B.C. out of step with the nation?

Mr. Bennett is inclined to think that on such matters whoever disagrees with him is out of step, rather than himself. This, in turn brings up the question of whether or not he represents the cross-section of thinking in this province.

I'm satisfied the majority of British Columbians aren't convinced there is a better system of government for this country than the present one. But I wonder if they are opposed, as Mr. Bennett seems to be, to even looking at the alternatives.

NDP leader Robert Strachan, for instance, on this question of studying the republican form of government, says it is one of the options open to Canada — and he adds "we ought to look at all the options that are open."

Pat McGeer, the new Liberal leader, also says he has never found an acceptable alternative to the present system, but he favors a study of these alternatives. At least it would let us know why we retain the present system; it could solve some of our most pressing problems.

Mr. Bennett has resisted all pressures right up to an unsuccessful NDP attempt in the House Friday to take the leaders of the opposition parties to Ottawa with him as part of the B.C. delegation.

Mr. Strachan tells how he received a phone call from the NDP national office last week asking which Ottawa hotel he would be staying in during the conference. Party officials in Ottawa had assumed since NDP provincial leaders from Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario would be accompanying their respective delegations, he as leader of the opposition in B.C., would be coming. He had to tell them he was not invited.

The premier demands his right to speak for the government of B.C. He cherishes it as something hard-won on the hustings. But surely in this case with the future of the nation at stake there is a place for dissenting viewpoints.

There is some conflict in the stands taken by other B.C.

parties on major points in the government's brief. Social Credit opposes an entrenched bill of rights, the Liberals and NDP favor it. But the government's regional concept has full support and the Official Languages Bill meets with some reservations by all parties.

What really counts is what will Canadians 100 years from now remember about the politicians who meet in Ottawa this week?

Political affiliations will be forgotten. So will economic theories. All that will count is whether the men who are to be the Fathers of the New Canada will have wisely considered all of the alternatives and chosen what is best for the nation.

As Prime Minister Trudeau has said, the survival of Canada as a nation hangs in the balance. I wonder if Mr. Bennett fully appreciates this fact.

No Limit to New Political Ploy

Debate-Opening Remark Trudeau's Escape Hatch

By STEWART MacLEOD, from Ottawa
Has Prime Minister Trudeau, by contending he is encouraging debate on controversial topics, discovered the greatest political escape hatch since the invention of "no comment?" Perhaps this wasn't the intention, but the possibilities are clearly without limit.

The classic example is the continuing public debate between two cabinet ministers who in different parts of the country have been voicing diametrically opposed views on Canada's membership in NATO.

Postmaster-General Eric Kierans has been saying Canada should get out of the alliance, while Defence Minister Cadieux has been saying she should stay in — both in most emphatic terms.

Had this seeming absence of cabinet solidarity occurred under former prime ministers Pearson and Diefenbaker there would have been a chorus of calls for ministerial resignations, and the daily Commons question period would likely have been an uproar.

But in this case, there was little reaction, when Trudeau said: "Both ministers are, as we said much earlier in this Parliament, asking the Canadian people to reflect on these matters."

In other words, the subject was merely being opened for debate.

On the grounds that he is opening a subject for debate, there is presumably nothing to prevent Trudeau from saying, for instance, "We should abolish the monarchy."

If there was no heated reaction he could let his statement stand; if there was an unholly roar of disapproval, he could easily say he was opening the subject for debate.

Former prime ministers must marvel at the ease with which Trudeau can smooth ruffled feathers with his explanation that he is opening debates.

When Pearson, during the 1958 election campaign, hopped into hot water by saying failure to elect a majority government would mean another general election, he and his aides spent weeks qualifying the statement.

There are still many Liberal politicians who feel the statement was construed as a threat and that it may have cost them that elusive majority.

Just think how incidental the incident would have been had Pearson been able to say, "I was just opening debate on the virtues of stable government."

Perhaps it won't be long before the most common question facing Trudeau at news conferences will be: "Is this a debate-opening remark, or a firm statement of policy?"

And when this happens, we might be back where we started. "No comment."

New Quebec Party Formed

CP, From Montreal

A new provincial political party — the Credit Social Unit — is being formed in Montreal.

The party is being organized by Jean-Paul Poulin and Clement Grondin, both defeated in the last federal election when they ran as Ralliement des Creditistes candidates.

Grondin, secretary-general of the party, said the party's policies are based on a "think positive" attitude. The movement has been in the planning stage for more than six months but the party itself still is being formed.

None of the organizers was willing to talk about problems such as separatism or federal-provincial affairs at an informal meeting last week.

"We are interested only in positive and just actions," said Poulin, organizer of the party. "It is ridiculous to speak against any group or faction. Rather, we will work in favor of the majority. This party will work for things, never against."

Grondin said the party is more interested in a strong and stable Quebec as part of a United Canada.

"French is the main language in Quebec and our cultural affairs here can allow us to develop a cultural atmosphere in North America."

"But by no means must we resort to achieving political independence," Grondin said the only future for Quebec is through the creation of stable economic financial climate.

Grondin and Poulin said they hope to gain the support of a large part of Creditiste leader Real Caouette's 400,000 Quebec supporters.

Poulin said he feels these supporters would favor a provincial wing of the Creditiste party and added "there is a sufficient number of Creditiste minded voters in Quebec for us to build up a strong voice as a third party."

Beautiful Margay Needs The Right Kind of Owner

By ELEANOR PRICE
From the jungles of South and Central America comes the beautiful Margay, his bright yellow coat regularly and immaculately spotted with solid, jet-black spots. He is graceful, ewe-necked, streamlined, often smaller than an ordinary housecat. His tail is exceptionally long. Eyes are brown, large and translucent.

In his native land, he is a tree dweller and eats birds, lizards, frogs and insects.

For the right person, he makes a fine pet, is neat and housebreaks easily to a litter pan. Being inordinately fond of water, he will go under it after food, sit in a damp basin and may even jump right into the water closet.

He should receive the same shots as a domestic cat. He trains readily to a leash and responds to the tone of his owner's voice.

He needs something on which to climb, but if he ruins drapes, bodily punishment should be avoided.

A parakeet swallows by stretching his neck, jerking his head, also by tongue pressure. If he makes too many neck-twisting motions and stretches his head far out, or if he flings seeds in all directions rather than eats them, he may have crop trouble, his crop being a thin-walled semi-elastic sac below the gullet intended to soften and soak food.

A bound or impacted crop is often detectable by being dis-

SAN FRANCISCO (CNS) — If Larry Lewis were 70, he would be a marvel. But the fact is he will be 102 in June.

Every morning Lewis arises at 4:30 to run the 6.7 miles of San Francisco's Golden Gate park in a snappy 37 minutes, then walks to work at the St. Francis Hotel, where he has been a waiter since 1948.

His step is springy, his cheeks rosy and his voice without a hint of the quaver that usually accompanies advancing years.

Lewis was born just two years after the end of the Civil War. He attributes his longevity to running and diet.

"I learned how to eat from the Navajo and Hopi Indians," he says. He drinks "30 to 33" glasses of water daily, eats only enough to keep his trim 148 pound frame going. He has very definite ideas on what foods should be eaten, and how they should be cooked.

"Some vegetables don't go together," he says, "like cauliflower and cabbage. My wife, Bessie, is a very good cook, but most American women don't know how to cook properly."

"They cook the vegetables and then they throw away the juice! That's where the vitamins are — in the juice, not the vegetables."

Lewis gives advice to all who will listen, and some who won't. Some doctors, for instance.

"I do everything wrong, they tell me," he says.

"They say you shouldn't exercise so rigorously after 45 and you shouldn't go to bed on a full stomach. I eat just before I go to bed."

Unless you know a 101-year-old doctor, you'd have to side with Lewis.

The centenarian started running at the age of nine, he casually mentions. "In what is now the state of Arizona," and he has never stopped.

He runs in the park every morning. Well, not every morning.

Convention Time Nears

By FAITH ANGUS
As in other years, the spring of 1969 is a season of philatelic conventions. One of the first, in which local clubs will participate, is the 11th annual Inland Empire Philatelic Exhibition to be held in Spokane, March 8-9.

About 175 frames are expected from competitors living in the Pacific Northwest and Canada.

The exhibition with its attendant bourse, auction and banquet will take place in the Empire Room at the Redpath Hotel.

The judges include Jack Bates, who is to be chief judge for the Northwest Federation Exhibition in May, Burton Slough of Vancouver, who is accredited with the American Philatelic Society for "World-Wide," Robert Simon, Idaho, a recognized expert, Thurlow Fraser of Roseland, a postal historian and Sherman E. Rogers, Kallispell, Mont.

A copy of the exhibition prospectus can be obtained from Russell A. Long, chairman of the exhibition committee, 411 Cleveland, Spokane, Wash. 99205.

March 15 will be known as Canada Day at the International exhibition INTERPEX, March 14-16 at the Hotel Americana, New York.

With the co-operation of the Canadian Stamp Journal of Toronto a fine display of 150 frames of stamps and other material will be exhibited by Canadian collectors.

Junior collectors are to be assigned a reserve area where they will receive special attention. A. Ben David, chairman of the junior collectors division of the Royal Philatelic Society of Canada is sponsoring this section. Films will be shown and lectures given to promote interest in Canadian stamps.

The Canadian post office will provide several stamp development panels for display and will operate a booth for the sale of Canadian stamps and stationery.

More than forty countries are participating in the exhibition. Fugera issued nine stamps on January with designs depicting Shakespearean plays.

The 25th features Midsummer

Night's Dream; 50th Othello; 75th Hamlet; 1R Macbeth; 2R Romeo and Juliet (airmail); 1.25R Merry Wives of Windsor; 2.50R All's Well That Ends Well; 3R Merchant of Venice; 5R Taming of the Shrew. All are five-color photogravure.

Four bird stamps, designed by Victor Whately, for St. Lucia were released in January: 10c and 25c show the hummingbird, colibri; 15c and 35c, St. Lucia parrot, a amazona versicolor whose local name is jacquot perroquet. Lithography printing is by Format International Ltd. on CA Block watermark paper in panes of 50.

Stamp To Mark Sports Occasion

OTTAWA (CP) — A stamp issue marking the first Canadian Summer Games to be held in Halifax will be issued by the post office Aug. 15.

The games, which are sponsored by the fitness council to encourage interprovincial competition, open in Halifax on the same date.

The post office said release of the Canada games stamp will coincide with that of an issue marking the 20th anniversary of the founding of Charlottetown as capital of Prince Edward Island.

Release of an issue marking the first non-stop transatlantic flight will be released June 13, not May 21 as previously announced, the post office said.

Shaw Show Tours City

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Clay Shaw's conspiracy trial moved en masse to the French Quarter Saturday as a prosecution witness led judge, jury, lawyers and defendant on a hunt for the apartment where Shaw and others allegedly talked about killing President Kennedy in 1963.

"We found a couple of cute girls," quipped defence lawyer F. Irvin Dymond after the guided tour of two apartment buildings near Shaw's own house.

Leading the unusual parade was a balding New York accountant, Charles I. Spiesel, 51.

Spiesel testified Friday he went to a June 1963 party where Shaw was the host in an apartment near or in the French Quarter. A conversation took place about how to assassinate the president, Spiesel said.

Dymond had demanded the apartment hunt. "I think it's vitally important to the defence of our case for the jury to know if this man knows what he's talking about," he said.

When the trial resumed, the prosecution asked for an adjournment until Monday to research the past history and ownership of a French Quarter apartment building Spiesel cited on the stand as the most likely location of the party. The judge granted the request.

PARTY SETTING
Spiesel was uncertain if he had found the right place. "I would say the second building we entered is similar, if not the building," he said. But he said it did not have a kitchen-dining room like the setting for the party he attended.

Spiesel made the apartment hunt after testifying that tax account competitors used psychological warfare, hypnosis and disguises to harass him for unexplained reasons.

After granting the defence request for the tour, Judge Edward Hagerty had the jurors loaded in a bus for the two-mile ride across the city.

Earlier, Dymond read to the jury a 1964 federal court complaint by Spiesel charging a detective agency and numerous other defendants with harassing him in his New York accountant business. The complaint said the defendants "used a new police technique to torture and conspired with various others to torture the plaintiff (Spiesel) mentally."

Young Girl Mauled By Mascot

HOUSTON Tex. (AP) — The mother of a four-year-old girl said the University of Houston cougar mascot attacked her daughter Saturday when the youngster ran after a red ball within the animal's reach.

Thomasena Prokes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Prokes of Houston, was bitten on the throat by the cougar and scratched under the left eye, her mother said.

The 100-pound animal was on a chain leash in front of its small house on campus when the incident happened, Mrs. Prokes said.

Thomasena received six stitches at the university clinic and was able to go home.

A university spokesman said the incident "will be brought to the attention of proper authorities at the university and if anything can be done to make the cougar safer we'll do it."

Blood Tranfusion Refusal

Patient Doomed Herself

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — A woman who died in hospital following a traffic accident last month literally signed her life away in an affidavit refusing a blood transfusion, two doctors told a coroner's inquest here.

Myrtle Meister, 76, of suburban Surrey, received multiple bone fractures when hit by a car Jan. 30. She died 18 hours later.

Dr. Campbell Coady, pathologist at Royal Columbian Hospital here, said cause of death was traumatic shock brought on by loss of blood. There were no injuries to vital organs.

"I am satisfied she would have lived had she accepted a transfusion," Dr. Coady said.

Dr. John Hunt, orthopedic surgeon who treated Mrs. Meister, said he was satisfied she would have survived her injuries with a blood transfusion.

He said Mrs. Meister had received injections of a blood substitute, but this did not carry oxygen and escaped from the blood vessels within a short time.

Dr. Hunt said Mrs. Meister was conscious and alert when he explained that her hope of recovery was precarious without a blood transfusion.

"But she signed an affidavit herself, declaring that she would not have the blood," he said. The affidavit later was co-signed by her son Freeman Meister.

The coroner's jury ruled that death was accidental, with no blame attached to any other person.

100-Year Cleanup Starts

By BILL THOMAS

Art restoration is usually a project that is carried on in a closed workshop with secret techniques and the close security of a top security defence project.

The Art Gallery of Greater Victoria has decided to break down the traditional barriers and show the public how this kind of job is carried out.

Mrs. H. V. Bartholomew and a team of assistants will renovate and restore a 17th-century tapestry in the main gallery, and the public is invited to watch the work in progress.

The tapestry came from the Chateau la Paquerette, near Versailles. Colin Graham, director of the gallery, said the art work was probably made in either the Aubusson or Gobelins factories.

The tapestry is a gift to the gallery from Mrs. J. H. Forge of Sidney.

Mrs. Bartholomew is an internationally recognized expert on embroidery and crewel work and she will supervise the project. She explained, "Large tapestries need cleaning and rebacking every century or so. This one was done by men working in pairs. It probably took them at least two years to complete."

"An artist drew the design, or cartoon as they are called, and this was attached to a wall. The workers then followed the pattern, one working from the left and one from the right."

"The warp was of fine lined thread, and the pattern was worked in colored wools. 'Oddly enough, the moths don't seem to care for a gourmet diet of aged wool. They leave tapestries alone.'"

"When we have cleaned this work, we will sew it with linen threads and back it with a nylon net."

"It will probably take us about three months to repair, and then it should be good for a few more hundred years."

Mrs. Bartholomew is being assisted by Alice Britten in the first stages of the long task.

Winner Wins Casino Card

SAN REMO, Italy (AP) — Reversing a previous decision, the City council decided Saturday to allow Prof. Richard Jarecki of Heidelberg, Germany, to continue to gamble in the local casino despite his consistent showing as a winner at roulette.

The council had barred Jarecki just three days ago, asserting that he was a professional gambler. The council is authorized to exclude professionals from the casino.

Jarecki's two Italian lawyers called on the council. They argued that a professor of forensic medicine such as Jarecki hardly could be considered a professional gambler. The council met briefly behind closed doors and agreed to revoke the ban.

Jarecki, who flew in from Germany to follow the case, will get an honor card allowing him to gamble in the casino without paying the entrance fee, the council said. The card is issued only to the casino's best customers.

The professor has been coming here on weekends for months. He is reported to have

Squirting Oil Well Sealed, Massive Mop-Up Starts

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP)—A well squirting raw oil into the blue Pacific for 12 days was sealed Saturday with a big plug of cement, and workers began a massive mop-up of blackened harbors and beaches.

A hundred men pumped 8,000 barrels of drilling mud into the runaway well to control the flow. Then they poured in 900 sacks of cement to cap it.

They kept mud flowing down on top of the cement and back up the outside of drill pipes to keep the shaft free for electrical instruments lowered into the well to check the plug.

Fritz Springman, spokesman for Union Oil Co., operator of the well, said more cement would be poured into the hole.

"When we get through we're going to have approximately a 3,400-foot column of cement," he said. "Then she'll be done."

NO RE-OPENING
There will be no way to re-open the well, which dumped 21,000 gallons a day into the water six miles offshore until it was stopped.

It produced a slick that covered 800 square miles for a time and plastered harbors and beaches with black goo that killed sea birds.

Meanwhile, all oil drilling and pumping has been stopped in the Santa Barbara Channel by federal order, pending a review of procedures to prevent any further leaks.

After a boat tour, Paul De Falco of the federal water pollution control administration said the oil slick was breaking into smaller and smaller patches. They were in an elliptical area more than 20 miles long and 11 miles out to sea.

De Falco said 50 men would be assigned to each mile of contaminated beach, beginning with those publicly used.

The crews will grow until they reach 1,000-1,500 men in the next week, he said, and probably will require another three weeks to complete the cleanup.

Log booms kept the worst of the oil out of small boat harbors in nearby Ventura County, but oil was thick on nearly 30 miles of shoreline.

At Santa Barbara, two-man teams paddled between 20 and 30 small, flat-bottomed boats around the harbor scattering straw over oil spots.

When it was thoroughly soaked, they raked it up and put it into barrels on the boats. Then they returned to a landing where a crane lifted out the barrels.

Beyond the splochy harbor, a small ship was using a blower to scatter straw on a slick as large as two football fields.

As the straw piled on the slick, the wind started blowing it toward shore, where crews said they would gather it up at high tide.

A parking lot was turned into a staging area where hundreds of tons of straw were stacked taller than houses.

"This straw takes in oil at a one-to-five ratio, one ton of straw gets about five tons of oil," said a biologist. He said the straw doesn't kill sea life as chemicals would.

About 600 oil-covered birds were turned in at two emergency stations in Santa Barbara and nearby Carpinteria by the California Fish and Game Department, but only about 100 died. Other birds were found dead on beaches.

Waterfowl experts flying over the oil slick in the sea observed 3,600 birds in one day, said fish and game official Frank Hubbard, but only 35 were dead or appeared to be in distress.

Of the condition of seals, which abound on the channel islands, Hubbard said, "They appear to be perfectly normal."

U.S. Car Critic:

Used Volkswagens Retained as New

Nader

WASHINGTON (AP)—Ralph Nader, persistent proponent of consumer causes, asked Saturday for a U.S. Senate investigation of what he described as the widespread practice of selling used Volkswagen automobiles as new cars.

In a letter to the Senate commerce committee, Nader said these fraudulent operations were well documented in a 1963-64 investigation by employees of the Federal Trade Commission but the findings were shelved at a higher staff level.

Because of continued complaints, Nader wrote, there have been renewed inquiries recently by the FTC staff and "it is now clear that the practice of selling used Volkswagens as new Volkswagens is still prevalent and still escaping action by the Federal Trade Commission."

He said VWs which have been driven in Europe are reconditioned overseas, usually in the Hamburg, West Germany, area and shipped to the United States where they are sold by unauthorized VW dealers who represent them as new.

Former Regional Official:

Campbell, Bruch Using Incorporation Defeat

Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell and MLA Herbert Bruch are taking advantage of the defeat of an incorporation bid in Langford, Colwood and Metcheson to further their political fortunes, says former regional board director William Reader.

"This is a scandalous situation, and I want to condemn it," he said Friday.

Mr. Reader noted that the pair will speak at a meeting Monday night, to explain alternatives to municipal government.

"WRONG TIME"
"This is no time to come up with alternatives. If there were any, they should have been brought up when the incorporation study committee saw the minister," said Mr. Reader.

"Mr. Bruch took very little interest in the affairs of this district until Saturday," he said. "Then the Social Credit party saw 3,000 votes all going one way and decided to take advantage of the situation."

Monday's meeting, which has been called unpolitical, is being sponsored by the Esquimalt Organizer Stockwell Day has said the meeting is being called to find ways of filling a vacuum caused by Saturday's 10-1 defeat of an incorporation referendum.

"When I was on the regional board with John Williams, we sought to keep politics out of regional affairs," said Mr. Reader, who resigned a year ago because of ill health.

"Ever since health minister Ralph Lottmark took his stand against pollution, though, we have seen the regional board dissolve into little political factions."

"Now we are seeing the same thing out here, with the Social Credit hoping to make a political thing out of a non-political referendum."

B.C. Firm Buying

VANCOUVER (CP)—Pacific Western Airlines Friday announced agreement to purchase Evers Transport and Truckers Terminal Distributing, both of Edmonton.

No purchase price for the privately-owned companies was given. The agreement is subject to approval of regulatory bodies which include the Canadian Transport Commission.

LONDON (AP)—The tanker Torrey Canyon crunched onto the Seven Stones reef off Southwest England nearly two years ago, sending millions of gallons of crude oil toward the beaches of Britain and France.

The mess was cleaned up long ago but it will be years before the legal wrangling over the bills ends.

The oil leak off Santa Barbara, Calif., which is smothering miles of beautiful beaches with oil, recalls the Torrey Canyon disaster, which on March 18, 1967, spilled oil onto 120 miles of Cornwall's golden sands.

The wreck of the 61,263-ton tanker was the most costly in merchant marine history. The ship and her cargo of 35,000, 000 gallons of crude oil were valued at $19,000,000. Clearing the oil alone cost the British $7,200,000.

A lawsuit to recover the cleaning bill was brought by the British government against the Bannockburn Tanker Corp., the Union Oil subsidiary that owned the ship. The case comes to trial in Singapore in September. British officials say the action could take years.

France has a lawsuit pending against the company in Rotterdam. More than 40 miles of Brittany beaches were coated with the Torrey oil, but they were quickly cleared. Fishing and tourism are big industries in Cornwall, and when the oil hit the beaches, the county feared bankruptcy. But business hardly suffered.

The use of detergents to break up the slick was more successful than had been expected, but the detergents upset marine life. Wildlife experts say undersea life is gradually returning, and sea birds are flying back to the beaches in greater numbers.

The board of trade, which is responsible for British shipping, imposed more rigid controls last year on the movement of merchant ships around Britain's coasts, particularly in the English Channel which is used by more than 1,000 tankers each year.

Britain has joined other nations in seeking new methods of international control, and maritime countries will meet in Brussels in September to discuss legal problems involved in tanker wrecks.

The British government has organized a nationwide network of local agencies which will share machinery, manpower and materials in case of a future tanker wreck.

In Cornwall, a daily watch is kept for minor oil slicks which occasionally threaten the beaches. Detergents are stockpiled in case of another major spill.

Sam Hashman of Calgary, divisional vice-president of Great West Saddlery Co. of Toronto, said the announcement makes no difference to tentative plans for a Great West development here: a $40,000,000 downtown office, hotel and store project.

Bank Chief Charges:

Inflation Ottawa's Fault

LONDON (CP)—G. Arnold Hart, board chairman of the Bank of Montreal, has charged Canadian governments at all levels with generating inflation by over-expenditure.

"I accuse the governments of being the major cause of inflation in Canada by higher spending, and the only way to cure it will be for them to take the lead in cutting spending," Hart said.

Hart, ending a two-week visit to England, suggested the federal government might start pruning on its outlay for Medicare and higher education.

UNIVERSAL PLAN
"I am not against medical care where it is needed," he said, "but it seems rather ridiculous for the federal government to launch a universal plan when many of the provincial governments say they cannot afford to join it."

As for the "tremendous expense" of education, he said so much public money is being laid out on university students that it is time for "a second look at it."

BANK CHIEF
The bank chief suggested that the central government, instead of "dissipating" money in fields like a national medical care plan, should get more interested in areas such as reduction of water pollution and relieving some of the burden of municipalities, which could not raise enough taxes for roads.

Hart's warning about inflation followed by four days a call here by Louis Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, for world governments to fight inflation and "restore respect for the value of money."

Rasminsky was talking to the Overseas Bankers' Club, in whose premises Hart met reporters, though the Bank of Montreal had said there was no connection between the two visits.

Hart has been on a periodical pulse-taking tour of the financial community here and moves on this week to Paris, Rome and Milan.

He said he does not see how inflation and high interest rates in Canada will come to an end unless government expenditures are brought down.

British reporters asked the banker whether he thought there is any chance of the Canadian dollar price being unpegged and allowed to float, and he said he sees no chance of that.

"I think the Canadian dollar now is priced just about right."

Several New Stars At Ottawa Meeting

By STEWART MacLEOD
OTTAWA (CP) — The cast of characters has changed significantly since the last federal-provincial conference.

And Prime Minister Trudeau, attending his first as head of the federal delegation, and who would normally get the undivided attention accorded newsmakers, is going to have to share this attention with two other freshmen leaders.

One of them is Premier Jean-Jacques Bertrand of Quebec, and the mere fact that he holds that office would guarantee him a starring role in any federal-provincial conference.

Among everything else, the office automatically vaults him into the position of chief spokesman for the majority of Canada's French-speaking citizens.

The other newcomer is Premier Harry Strom of Alberta, whose provincial brief to the conference says the federal proposal to entrench language rights into the constitution is "objectionable and unacceptable."

BIG ROLE

Since Trudeau will be chairman of the meetings, there would appear to be grounds for assuming that all three newcomers will be quick into the fray. The question of language rights tops the agenda.

Some of the excitement that would normally surround Trudeau's initiation as a prime-ministerial delegate, is tempered by the fact that he played such a prominent role in last year's conference when he was justice minister.

Sitting at Prime Minister Pearson's right hand through most of the sessions he was perhaps the most prominent speaker. And he and former premier Daniel Johnson of Quebec clashed in no uncertain terms. Such a clash with Bertrand is far less likely. The five-foot-six-inch premier is known to detest wrangling. With his powerful voice, and speaking slowly, he tends to translate principles into practical solutions.

While Bertrand is not as fluent in English as was Johnson, he personally believes in bilingualism and all of his seven children are bilingual.

COUNTRY LAWYER

Generally, federal officials are encouraged with the prospect of negotiating with Bertrand, long known as a reform-minded federalist with a pragmatic approach. The 52-year-old country lawyer has long advocated constitutional changes that would allow the provinces to prosper in the federal system.

He has said: "... French Canada no longer merely wishes to endure. It wants to grow, to flourish. It feels cramped within structures of another age. It has an uneasy sense of constraint."

DIVIDING POWERS

He feels that the question of dividing powers between governments should get priority over the language question at the conference.

Although the long-term language views of Strom and Bertrand appear to be firmly opposed, officials here doubt whether the newcomers will have a major clash on the question. There is some expectation that Trudeau will mount an exceedingly strong argument for his official languages bill and that premiers generally supporting this view will have little need to press the point.

OPEN MIND

While Strom, who took over from Ernest C. Manning in December, has said he will be coming to the conference with "an open mind," his province's brief contains some strong views on the question of language. Of the 11 points in Alberta's brief, 10 of them deal with the language issue.

On other questions, Strom, 54, is known to feel that the West is consistently underrepresented at the federal level and he favors a broad review of fiscal apportionment between levels of government.

At six feet three inches, he will tower over other government leaders at the conference and will make his points with a slow, unspectacular speaking style. The fair-haired leader, son of a Swedish immigrant farm family, is known as a smooth, as opposed to incisive, debater.

He has no known ability in the French language.

LAST DECADE

Officials here feel that many of Strom's views will be a continuation of the views expressed by the Alberta government over the last decade. Most of Manning's cabinet continued under Strom.

But unlike Quebec, with which Ottawa is in constant contact, there have been few official dealings with the new Alberta premier in his two months of leadership.

Poetic Hair Ordered After Baseball Cuts

PULLMAN, Wash. (AP) — Poet-professor Howard McCord directed his male students Saturday to grow long hair and beards as a counter-threat to snip-and-clip orders issued by coach Chuck Brayton to his Washington State University baseball players.

Brayton provided a barber and even helped with the shearing to make sure his team was shaven and shorn on the eve of spring practice.

EDICT ISSUED

His edict said each player "while representing Washington State University as part of the Cougar baseball program will be expected to be neat in appearance."

Prof. McCord issued his rebuttal through the student newspaper, The Evergreen, saying he so admired Brayton's dandy idea as a good device for creating a positive image among his students that he would give it a try.

MALE STUDENTS

"I am requiring that male students in English 452 (Creative Poetry) allow their hair and/or beards and sideburns to grow to suitably poetic lengths ... following the historic tradition of such poets as Walt Whitman, Ezra Pound, Allen Ginsberg ... and many more," the professor wrote.

The professor has no beard but wears his hair too long to qualify for the baseball team. Brayton is bald, facially and partially.

Mothers' March Brings $26,000

The Mothers' March gathered $26,000 in its week-long Victoria campaign which ended Saturday, despite accusations of top-heavy administration and shrinking programs.

There have been no reports so far from the outlying areas in the Saanich Peninsula and Langford to Sooke, where greater distances usually mean a lengthier canvass.

However, Ray St. Dennis, executive secretary of the Kinsman Rehabilitation Foundation, said Saturday he did not expect to reach the campaign goal of $50,000, but was hoping to equal last year's $38,000.

Mr. St. Dennis said controversy over the destination of funds had caused a shortage of volunteer canvassers when many marchers withdrew from the campaign.

As a result, many parts of the city were not covered. He said donations could still be mailed instead to the foundation at 3943D Quadra Street.

Mr. St. Dennis said reports from the rest of the Island indicated final totals there would exceed last year's.

Winds Block Fodder For Alberta's Cattle

Strong winds and dwindling feed supplies are beginning to exact a toll among cattle herds on ranches in the southern Alberta foothills.

With 50-mile-an-hour winds creating near blizzard conditions in some areas, roads are blocked and ranchers are prevented from supplying feed to their herds, already weakened by a recent three-week spell of sub-zero cold.

"You can almost see them shrinking from day to day," Calgary regional agriculturalist Morely Douglas said.

Adults-only apartment buildings, opposed by Edmonton city council, are declared proper in a judgment released by the Alberta Supreme Court.

Last year city council opposed a 200-suite apartment building partly because it would overcrowd area schools. Harford Holdings Ltd., the developer, appealed to the provincial planning board which ordered council to issue a permit, subject to the adults-only condition.

The city did not appeal the board ruling but refused to issue the permit. Harford won a further case that forced the city to grant the permit. The adults-only condition was removed.

The Edmonton Journal says the Alberta government has decided to stay out of the federal medical care schemes in 1969.

The newspaper says the announcement will be made in the speech from the Throne when the legislature opens Feb. 13.

A survey by a doctor at Oshawa's Footprints Hospital shows that more than 25 per cent of city high school students have tried marijuana.

Speaking at a panel on legalization of the drug, Dr. Neil Finer said his survey also shows that depending on the school, from one to 30 per cent of the students are probably using the drug on a regular basis.

Canadian Tenpin Body Needs Help for Aims

By KING LEE

Hazel McLeary of Victoria, who attended the Canadian Tenpin Federation's annual meeting in Winnipeg on the last weekend of January, reports that the organization has high aims which can only be attained with financial help from those interested enough to do so.

One of 12 provincial representatives from six provinces: B.C., Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec — the only provinces which have the tenpin game — Mrs. McLeary was named one of the federation's directors while the other B.C. representative, Larry Hatch of Vancouver, was elected third vice-president. Frank Degenstein of Regina was elected president, Joan Easby of Calgary, first vice-president; Rod Claringbold of Montreal, second vice-president; and Alice McMurdo of Toronto, secretary-treasurer.

HONORARY PRESIDENT
Also attending and given voting privileges at the meeting were Women's International Bowling Congress executive-director Shirley Eames of Toronto and Milton Webber, also of Toronto, American Bowling Congress executive-director, who was elected as honorary president.

Officers elected at the meeting will serve three-year terms. It was decided at the two-day meeting to send a Canadian team of eight men and six women to the Federation Internationale Des Quilicres (FIQ) American zone tournament in Puerto Rico, August 31 to September 6, 1969.

B.C. TRIALS
Because a team must be declared by July 1, B.C.'s trials to qualify bowlers to represent Canada will be held in Vancouver on May 31 and June 1.

An aim for 1971 for the federation is to send a two-man and two-woman team to the FIQ World tournament, likely to be held in Milwaukee, Wis.

All of this hinges on the financial backing the organization gets — from bowlers, bowling establishment proprietors, bowling equipment manufacturers and government.

Entries Pour In For Colonist Fivepin Bonspiel

There are still four weeks left before the entry deadline in The Daily Colonist's sixth annual Vancouver Island Fivepin Bonspiel, scheduled at Gibson's Recreation March 20-23, but the chances are excellent that the maximum entry will be reached some time earlier.

Offering a guaranteed $1,800 in cash prizes, the bonspiel is limited to 128 teams, and entries will close as soon as the maximum is reached with late entries going on a waiting list. As of yesterday afternoon, the entry figure was nearing the halfway point.

UP-ISLAND ENTRIES

Included in a rash of entries received Friday night and yesterday afternoon were seven teams from Nanaimo and one from Campbell River, the first of an expected 20-30 teams of Up-island bowlers.

The only major change from last season is the increase of $300 in prize money. Rules and the format are unchanged with teams to be made up of four bowlers of any combination of the sexes who have bowled a minimum of 18 games in one league during the current season by Jan. 26.

HIGHEST AVERAGE

Bowlers who have played at least 18 games by that date in more than one league are required to use their highest average.

Team scratch is 900 and team handicap is based on 80 per cent of the difference between 900 and the combined team average. Entry fee is $3 per bowler ($12 per team) and bowling is paid for as the three-game matches are played at regular lineages charges.

All teams are assured of a minimum of three matches and must be beaten twice before losing their chance at the larger cash prizes.

PRIZE MONEY

Top prize is the $480 which goes to the team winning the Colonist event. The runnerup in this event will receive $240 and the losing semifinalists $100 each.

Another $710, to be split on a $350-$180-$90-$50 basis, will go to the teams reaching the semifinals in Gibson's event. All teams drop from the Colonist event into Gibson's after their first loss before reaching the Colonist semis.

Teams losing their first two games will play in Gar's Trophies event, which offers $170 to be split among the semifinalists, $80 of which goes to the winner.

In addition to cash prizes, 16 engraved trophies are up for competition. Each member of the three event-winning teams receives a trophy and Gar's Trophies has offered a trophy for the high single and high three, men and women, rolled by bowlers not on a team winning a cash prize.

Entry forms are available at most island fivepin establishments and a minimum deposit of $3 is needed for acceptance.

Eimtracht's Schmidt leaps high in traffic to punch ball clear

Beard Slips Into Lead In Desert Golf Classic

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Frank Beard, the self-styled desert rat, slipped in with a four-under-par 68 and a 72-hole score of 277 Saturday and goes into the final 18 holes of the Bob Hope Desert Classic with a two-stroke lead today.

The 29-year-old pro, who noted that he has had marked success on desert courses, here and in Nevada, played the par 36-72 La Quinta Country Club course in 36-68. His 277 is 11 strokes under par.

Tied at 279 were Billy Casper with 69, Art Wall, 70, and Jack Montgomery, 67.

George Knudson of Toronto was putting on a more than respectable show, hanging only three strokes off the pace with rounds of 72-71-68, for a strong 280 total.

FUNSETH SLIPS

Rod Funseth, who had led through the second and third rounds, started off with a double bogey six and wound up with a 75 for a tie at 281 with Miller Barber and Orville Moody.

Misfortune hit the popular U.S. Open champion, Lee Trevino, on the 13th hole where he took a triple-bogey six.

Trevino drove to the left of a bunker and blasted off clear across 20 feet beyond the green. His chip back just reached the apron. He putted ten feet short of the cup and putted again. The ball stopped 11 inches short.

Trevino putted again and missed. He finally holed out.

Trevino had a bogey five on the previous hole and thus lost four strokes in two holes. Time began to run out on the defending champion, Arnold Palmer, and Jack Nicklaus.

Palmer's 72 gave him 286 and Nicklaus' 68 gave him 285.

The field was cut to the low 70's and ties. Scores of 293 and under qualified for the last round.

Second-Half Blues Still Prove Plague

By KEVAN HULL

Victoria O'Keefe opened the 1969 portion of the Pacific Coast Soccer League schedule on the same note as they ended the 1968 portion — with the second-half blues.

Capitalizing on two goal-mouth chances, Vancouver's last-place Eintracht club scored twice in the second half Saturday before 300 Macdonald Park fans to earn a 2-1 victory which dealt Victoria's already-slim playoff chances a probably-fatal blow.

Result left O'Keefe tied, at 12 points, with North Shore. New Westminster Labatts, holding down the fourth playoff spot at the moment, are only one point ahead of the defending champions but have SIX games in hand.

And that's not all of it. O'Keefe have managed only three points from their last seven games and haven't won since they defeated Eintracht, 4-1, here on Dec. 1.

But it was a different Eintracht club which returned Saturday. The tailenders had a lot more desire and turned in a better team effort.

In view of the long layoff, the first half produced unexpectedly good soccer with O'Keefe going ahead after 10 minutes on a well-taken effort which brought Ike McKay his seventh goal.

McKay, not in best condition because of asthma and flu, couldn't return for the start of the second half and the Islanders started playing a let-George-do-it game, leaving most of the loose balls for the eager Mainlanders.

Lejos Vitek, a former member of the defunct Vancouver Royals, received credit for the tying

North Island Rinks Sweep Mixed Curling

COURTENAY—North Island rinks scored a sweep Saturday, winning all four Vancouver Island spots in the Pacific Coast Curling Association mixed final, in the eight-rink, double-knockout zone playoff against four south Island winners at the Comox Valley Curling Club.

South Island rinks, three from Esquimalt and one from the Victoria Curling Club, failed to win any of the five games they played against the well-balanced north Island finalists.

First to reach the PCAA playoff were Vern Thompson (Bunny Anderson, Ken and Diane White) of Nanaimo and Chuck Perry (Mary Davies, Bob Caracadden and Ollie Aasen) of the Comox Valley club.

MOVES TO FINAL

Thompson defeated Ted Calbeck of Victoria, 10-8, on the first draw, then won his berth by reaching the final of "A" event with an 8-7 decision over climatic Harry Whitman.

Perry started with an 11-6 win over Bill Fussey of Esquimalt and finished off with a 14-4 rout of Pat Marshall of Esquimalt.

Whitman reached the "A" semis with an 8-6 win over Jim Marasco of Port Alberni, Marshall with an 8-7, extra-end win over Gordon Hooley of Esquimalt.

Marasco (Eleanor Gustene, Ken and Oliver Coomber) then defeated Calbeck, 9-4, in the quarter-finals of "B" event and won his spot by defeating Hooley, 11-5. Hooley won the other "B" quarterfinal, 8-4, from Fussey.

Whitman (Jessie Whitman, Frank Jedrejczyk, Faye Dorman) qualified for the PCAA playoff with a 10-4 win over Marshall.

PLAY NEXT WEEKEND

The Island survivors, four because the Island zone is hosting the PCAA final, will play against two winners from each of the Lower Mainland and Fraser Valley zones at the Campbell River Curling Club next weekend.

Winner of the PCAA playoff will play in Campbell River for a best-of-three provincial final against the B.C. Curling Association champion, the winner of representative B.C. in the Canadian final.

Smale Keeps Title In Interior Curling

KIMBERLEY — Kevin Smale of Prince George retained his B.C. Curling Association championship on Saturday to gain a second straight chance at the men's provincial championship.

Smale made it by defeating Eric Bisgrove of Kimberley, 8-6, in the deciding game of the double-knockout playoff which involved seven zone winners and eight rinks which qualified out of the annual BCCA bonspiel.

It was the 11th win in 12 playoff games for Smale, whose only loss was the 14-6 clobbering he took from Bisgrove in the "A" event semifinals.

The break against Bisgrove came on the 10th end when vice-skip Pete Sherba successfully executed a raise and roll to leave the Prince George rink with two counters.

After an exchange of takeouts had left the Prince George rink with one counter, Smale made his free draw for two to take a 7-5 lead. The rinks exchanged single counters on the last two ends.

Bisgrove earned his berth in the final by defeating Roy Vinthers of Kamloops, 8-7, in the "A" final. Vinthers had an early lead, started home one up but lost when Bisgrove needed only to make a free draw with his last rock to get the winning point.

Smale won the "B" final by defeating Don Scherk of Prince Rupert, 6-5, when Scherk was three inches away with a draw for the tying point.

Joining Lions

VANCOUVER (CP) — Donny Moore, 265-pound running back at University of Washington before spending the last two years in the U.S. Army, will play for British Columbia Lions of the Western Football Conference this season.

Lesser Teams, Weather In Soccer Fore

LONDON (CP) — While snow and ice kept the English League First Division giants and Football Association Cup favorites in cold storage, the lesser clubs monopolized the interest in the British soccer program Saturday.

All eight fifth-round English FA Cup ties were postponed—the first time a complete round was wiped out by the weather—and only four of the 30 English League games were played.

CARDIFF TOPS OXFORD

In the four played as scheduled Cardiff City took the honors with a 5-0 victory over Oxford United to jump into second place in the Second Division, four points behind Derby. Cardiff got two goals each from Brian Clark and John Toshack and one by Ronnie Bird.

The loss left Oxford rooted even more firmly at the bottom of the standings and it looks almost certain to return to the Third Division if it moved up from last season.

In the only other Second Division game Portsmouth edged Hull City 1-0, Ray Hiron getting the goal 10 minutes from full time.

WATFORD WINS EASILY

Watford increased its lead in the Third Division to two points with a convincing 5-1 victory over Rotherham United. In the other game, third-placed Bournemouth dropped a valuable two points in a surprising 2-0 defeat against Luton Town.

Scotland was more fortunate with the weather. Four second-round Scottish FA Cup games and seven Scottish League games were played.

With two of the Cup games resulting in draws, Dundee United and Morton were the only clubs to go through to the third round. Dundee United centre-forward

Ken Cameron, Scotland's leading goal-scorer, netted three goals in a 6-2 Dundee victory over Second Division Ayr United.

Morton found Second Division Stranraer a tough proposition, but after a goalless first half, Morton found its touch, eventually winning 3-1.

Second Division Montrose and Kilmarnock played to a 1-1 tie. Montrose scored after five minutes, but Kilmarnock tied the score in the 60th minute and forced a replay. The cup game between St. Johnstone and East Stirling also ended in a 1-1 draw.

Nanaimo Basketball Player Caught in System Shuffle

By KEVAN MULL

When the Vancouver Island high school boys' basketball championships are played at the University of Victoria gymnasium March 7-8, Ian Thompson of Nanaimo High School will not be participating if the Haketers make it to the Island final.

Ian, 18, has been caught in the shuffle of a new system and as there are no rules currently covering his situation, has been ruled ineligible by the B.C. High School Boys' Basketball Association.

DIFFICULT FOR PARENTS

Thompson is a good prep player and it is a shame that he will not be able to play. It is difficult for his parents, Ray and Jane Plater, to understand why he can't play. And it is just as impossible for the association to allow him to play.

The problem arises from the entry of the Nanaimo school district into a two-year experimental tryout of a semester system, in which a student doesn't have to attend for a full year.

ON SEMESTER PROGRAM

Thompson, eligible through age for another basketball season, needed only two courses to complete his graduation program. He decided to work in the Interior for the first semester, and is currently taking four subjects.

His twin brother, Allan, who is also on the team, is on a different program and is attending both semesters.

But Ian is fulfilling the requirements of his school district to the full.

However, this is a unique situation for the association, which has earned a great deal of respect for its handling of the provincial school play-downs and annual tournament.

"Our belief is that a boy goes to school to get an education, not to play basketball," said association president Jack Gilbert of Port Alberni. "The only reason we've got where we are is that we've played by the book."

TOLD COACH

The "book" lists several deadlines for the signing and transferring of players and it is on these deadlines that the association had to rule Thompson ineligible.

"I was aware that this situation was arising," said Gilbert. "I told the coach (R. Debusyscher) in October, before any of the deadlines had been reached, to put the problem down in writing to the board of governors."

"This was not done until well into January and all the deadlines had passed."

"I feel the board of governors gave the case a fair hearing. Both the request and appeal were turned down."

MUST LIVE BY RULES

An organization must live by its rules, but it is hard for the parents and the boy. In a letter to the association secretary, Chas McLachlan of Vancouver, Mrs. Plater wrote:

"I do not know your reasons for making your decision. I believe attendance is the only basis you have for not allowing second semester students to play. Using this basis, how do you justify eligibility of those who 'attend' solely for the purpose of playing basketball and drop out immediately after the end of a glorious season? It seems to me that any student who satisfies the requirements of a school for attendance should also satisfy yours in this regard."

"Surely a body such as yours must realize that a new situation requires a very thorough re-examination and amendment of rules which were made to fit a different situation. His will not be the only school on a semester system in the future."

The conclusion, small as it is, for the Platers and their son, is that his case will prompt the re-examination and give the association something to work on for next season.

Golden Tears Flow on Old Collars

LONDON — When excavation worker Malcolm Tricker, 26, found five ancient gold collars last October at a building site near Ipswich experts told him to expect a reward of about £5,000. Tricker, who earns £15 a week operating a bulldozer, had taken the collars to the British Museum. Now, the museum has announced the collars date from the Iron Age, which began in Britain about 500 B.C. and are rare because iron ornaments were more common then — so the reward will be £45,000. Mr. Tricker's reaction to the news was: "I just cried and cried."

HOUSTON — Astronaut Walter Schirra, 45, one of the original seven U.S. Mercury spacemen, will leave the space program June 1 for a job in private industry. He retired from space flying after commanding the first Apollo mission last October.

BOON — West German naval Lieut. Erik Wolf, 30, a telecommunications officer in the naval aviation section, was found hanged in his office, the 12th suicide among defence department officers and officials in four months. Officials blamed the suicide on personal reasons.

CALGARY — Andy Grebely asked the city to help pay for $1,500 in repairs to a home he owned. Police closed it for three weeks recently after the tenants, Mr. and Mrs. Julius Maslins, were arrested on charges of manslaughter and criminal negligence in the discipline-death of their daughter Eva, 18. While it was closed, the water pipes froze and flooring was warped.

ST. PAUL, Minn. — The city has rescinded an order by its purchasing department that the city zoo stop feeding grapes to its animals and birds because of the continent-wide boycott growing out of a grape workers' labor dispute in California. Zoo director John Fletcher said he asked that the order be rescinded, giving as his reason: "Did you ever try to reason with an undernourished gorilla?"

NEW ORLEANS — Police said rejected sailor Leon Ezell, 53, shot and killed himself after wounding his longtime woman friend, Ethelyn Sherrill, 50, and Arthur Lewis, 31. The wounded are recovering. The shootings occurred where the two wounded worked, in a casket plant.

QUEBEC CITY — Rev. Raymond Laviole, whose involvement in a social-action movement gave him the nickname of Workers' Priest, resigned from his parish duties after Cardinal Roy ordered him to leave the movement. The cardinal's reasons were Laviole's health and "the need to concentrate on his parish."

VANCOUVER — Colin Lowery, executive assistant to Mayor Tom Campbell, who has been in hospital two weeks with bleeding stomach ulcers, was admitted to hospital for 10 days of tests to determine whether he also has ulcers.

CINCINNATI — Christine Cohen, 7, born with a severely malformed heart, was in satisfactory condition after receiving the heart of traffic accident victim William Becker, 7, in a 13-hour, 94-hour transplant operation.

SEATTLE — Mayor Dorn Brannan has been named by President Nixon to a newly-created post of assistant secretary of transportation in charge of urban systems and environment. Brannan, 68, will be succeeded as Seattle mayor by a temporary replacement elected by city council.

WASHINGTON — President Nixon has named Dr. John Hannah, 66, to head the Agency for International Development, which handles the foreign aid program. Hannah has been president of Michigan State University and head of the Civil Rights Commission.

Mothers Protest Load Of Restricted Movies

Six out of eight films on show locally are in the restricted category, and several mothers have said they plan to protest to local theatre managers.

The only current films not carrying the black cat sign are a John Wayne adventure film, Hellfighters, and the Thomas Hardy classic, Far From the Madding Crowd.

Famous Players theatre managers Alex Reid and Martin Cave said Saturday that the six-out-of-eight score was just a matter of coincidence.

Mr. Cave said, "We will go for months without seeing a black cat, and suddenly we get nothing but pictures like this. It just happens to be the way they are released."

The protesting mothers said many children got in to see restricted films, but the managers denied it.

The managers said they insisted on proof of age in any case of doubt.

B.C. film censor Ray MacDonald said it was unfortunate when the present situation prevailed, but added that there was nothing he could do about it. He said it was not his job to interfere with movie-goers' free choice.

BACKSTAGE

Patrick O'Neill

The soul of Ireland is supposed to be poetry, romantic revolution, and wistful love songs. But at Langham Court, the Irish sole is much more dirty.

In fact the barefoot girls are stomping real mud, as they cross the stage in J. M. Synge's 'The Playboy of the Western World'.

The crew spread dirt everywhere for the realistic production of the comedy about a would-be father killer from County Mayo.

With tender care they removed the sharp rocks from the dirt, so the girls wouldn't cut their bare feet.

But floors, like bricks, apparently cannot be well-made without straw, and that was Harriet Allen's undoing.

Mrs. Allen, playing Peggymike, stepped on a stray piece of straw, and got a painful splinter in her foot.

It is quite different from the last time she played the role, in a much more lyrical production, in Pittsburgh.

"It is the first time I have ever redone a role," she said.

While the Pittsburgh production did not have the realism of the show now playing at Langham Court, Mrs. Allen didn't have much trouble changing interpretations.

And for a simple reason: "I've forgotten almost everything about that older production. I always forget a part the moment the play is over."

"I think it's the only way to do it, when you are playing role after role."

But there was one disadvantage, too. She found she had forgotten every single line in the part, and had to start from scratch.

The production, which opened Thursday, is a co-operative venture of the University of Victoria and Victoria Theatre Guild.

Along with the realistic treatment of the theme, director Wandale Henshaw has also taken a new line on the character of Christy.

The young hero, instead of being the traditional wistful weak Irish lad, now has some fire and strength.

Tony Jenkins is playing the part. As Mrs. Allen described it, now Christy "doesn't know what possibilities he has, but you can see the possibilities are there."

Winchell: Twilight of Giant

By RAY LOYND
Los Angeles Times

Walter Winchell confirmed last week he is turning in his keyboard after nearly 50 years of socking it 'to Mr. and Mrs. America and all the ships at sea.'

Not too many people, either newsmen or readers, are going to care too much. Some will welcome it.

His daily column clobbered some big people (Harry Truman and Josephine Baker come immediately to mind), and in the profession, particularly in recent years, editors tolerated rather than admired him and the deskmen who had to edit his copy often moaned because it was unreadable.

Winchell would have a roar-

Death Rattle Shaking Folk-Image Column

ing explosive for all this, and it recalls the cocky, romantic legend he finger-painted on American journalism. In its heyday, his gossip column spelled power and influence unknown among columnists today and, in the dashing glory of it all, he became a millionaire.

Today (he'll be 72 in April), he's left with the money, the Damon Runyon Cancer Fund and not much else. Which isn't a bad way to fade out, except that Winchell lived for his column.

It killed him to lose a major outlet in New York City, and his syndication, once numbering close to 1,100 papers, had tumbled to 100 or fewer subscribers in the past year.

Finally, the shock of personal tragedy crumbled his world when his son, Walter Winchell, Jr., an itinerant dishwasher and former newsman, took his own life last Christmas Day.

Winchell wrote his bosses, the McNaught syndicate, that he was "shaken up" and requested a leave of absence. No one expects him to return.

Winchell would vehemently deny that he's totally through. He's revising a book of memoirs 'The Private Papers of Walter Winchell,' and reportedly has lined up radio and TV commercials.

No one, it is true, has to rhapsodize about the death of an era or even a style of reporting. His influence is quite active, for a better or worse, but the death rattle of his column does signal an event in terms of the sheer folk image that he had become.

Winchell never liked to sleep. Cruising in police cars was more his speed.

He kept a cottage in Los Angeles at the Ambassador Hotel and when in town he loved to hit the city room at the Herald-Examiner (one of his last big outlets) and knock out his copy at 3 or 4 in the morning, hat tilted back, shirttails up, a weary overnight city editor and copy boy alone in the presence of all that ego.

One oldtime press agent, who has planted stories with Winchell for 40 years, said: "He's always only had one love in his life, and that's his column. Outside his column, he doesn't care about anybody."

"But press agents loved him. You had to give him dynamite material, but he would pay you off with a plug for a nondescript restaurant or whatever."

Winchell's power diminished in the early 1960s. The major blow occurred when Hearst's King Features began trimming his copy, knocking out many of his jingoistic and antiquated diatribes.

One time his column arrived over the King Features wire snipped to one paragraph. Winchell fought and temporarily won that battle, but the trimming started again. For a man who had once reportedly "had a hot line to F.D.R. and J. Edgar Hoover," as old pitchmen called it, this was ignominy.

He quit King Features in 1967, shilled on his own for a while, and picked up with a smaller circulation with McNaught.

"But it was frustration," said another old friend. "He wanted to be big. After all, this was the man who made the 'Stork Club,' to whom people flocked at table 50 in the Club Room and all that. His own idiosyncrasies defeated him."

"If his retirement is real, his move is based on horror and his own shock at the suicide of his son. He was never exactly a father and it's rough to find that out at 70. When he gets over the shock of recent events, I think he'll just reshuffle his life and

The Peppermint Cycle has some new components. The rock band which has been the house group at the A Go Go on Wharf Street has split up and Ralph Proceviat, lead guitar, and Phil Roberge, bass, have decided to form their own group.

Drummer Roy Bowdel, organist Brian Forgy and singer Robbie Gillespie will be joined by guitarists Art DeMuelle and Bruce Johnson, the band will still be called the Peppermint Cycle and will still play the same dates at the Wharf Street club.

Vancouver Opera Association has engaged over 130 singers, dancers and musicians for a production of Coumad's Faust. It will open Feb. 20 in the Queen Elizabeth Theatre. The show will run Feb. 22, 25, 27 and March 1 with a student matinee March 4.

The opera will be sung in French and stars Michele Molese in the title role. Richard Cross will sing Mephistopheles and Heather Thomson will sing Marguerite.

Mondays in Bigger Room

Jazz Club at Old Forge Importing First Guest

BILL THOMAS

The jazz club that started as a Sunday night venture at the Old Forge has been successful so the night has been changed to Monday starting at 8 p.m.

The group, led by Blaine Tringham, will move into the bigger room and is ready for its first imported guest.

Monday night blues singer and trombonist Big Miller will sit in with the local group. Mr. Miller comes with a solid reputation.

In the early 50s Big Miller left the Jay McShann band in Kansas City to go on the road with Duke Ellington. It was while on tour that the big Negro singer really got the feel of singing with a big, swinging band.

EXPERIENCE BROADENED
In New York he broadened his experience and was invited to the South Bay Jazz Festival. He played at Birdland with Nat Pierce, Jon Hendricks and also with Cannonball Adderly.

The singer got one of his biggest breaks when he was asked to play the Monterey Jazz Festival. His date there proved a show stopper. Out of the festival grew an interesting relationship with Jon Hendricks that resulted in a program titled Evolution of the Blues which was repeated in Carnegie Hall.

Big Miller has a solid musical background. He graduated with a degree in music from Gary, Indiana and has played as a soloist, as part of a trio and with big bands.

Now Big Miller is best known as a singer but he still doubles on trombone when he gets the feeling.

He should make an exciting addition to the jazz sound of the group.

Vancouver-based singer Lynn Brooks is back for another engagement at the Old Forge. She has a great voice and the crowd loves her.

The show is not billed as an act but Miss Brooks is described as a singer with the house band. She does much more than her billing indicates. She not only sings beautifully but she dances as well.

If all the acts that have played the Old Forge had been as effective as our Miss Brooks then perhaps the policy of live entertainment would have flourished.

The Victoria Symphony needs to tighten the ground rules for concerts at the Royal Theatre. Patrons arrive late and wander in when they feel like it. This is most disturbing and quite unnecessary. The rule of no admittance until there is a break in the program should be enforced. It may upset the tardy but this is better than antagonizing those who take the trouble to arrive in time.

The powers behind the tomes at the university will have to give active consideration to building suitable premises for events staged by the Fine Arts School.

The Phoenix Theatre and the MacLaurin Music Room are not suitable for either theatre or music. Both are far too small. The music department needs a recital room. Possibly a design can be found that would serve a variety of needs but I think a theatre and a concert room are a necessity.

Each year the music department attracts more distinguished guest artists. The Borodin Quartet was outstanding and drew a better than full house. As time goes on more artists of this calibre will visit the campus. The music division

Winchell made many calls in recent years asking for last-second additions to his column: "Just fix it up, you know how to put it in words."

He talked as he wrote, in dots and dashes, and his stories grew more repetitious. But youthful and glib newsmen, everybody, circled around and listened — you never talked with Winchell, you listened — when he entered a city room.

In the old days of the New York Graphic and Mark Hellinger, that brassy lore of urban newspaperdom, no newsmen would start his day without first reading Winchell. And Winchell began his by plopping in his favorite barber chair, ordering a shave and ripping through a pile of newspapers in his lap. There are worse legacies than that.

Fernwood Mansion, Containing 109 Years of Lore, To Be Knocked Flat for 200 Apartment Units

More History May Vanish

By BILL STAVDAL

One of Victoria's oldest homes, 109-year-old Fernwood, at Vinings and Begbie, is scheduled for demolition Monday to make way for a major apartment development.

Victoria's architect and two city architects voiced shock Saturday at the impending end of Fernwood, and said it was worth saving in some form.

Harvey Pinch, partner in the firm of Reeson and Pinch, which plans to build more than 200 apartment units on 3.5-acre site, said Saturday he was unaware of plans for the house. Asking price was a reported $245,000.

"I don't know anything about it," said Mr. Pinch.

Hoping to save two-story 15-room fieldstone manor are architect Amalie Helmcken, architect H. C. Charlesworth, president of the Greater Victoria Historic Buildings Foundation, and architect Peter Cotton, a past president of the foundation.

'A Shock'

"Did I ever get a shock yesterday (Friday) when I discovered a demolition permit had been issued!" said Mr. Helmcken. "It definitely is worthwhile saving."

"I've been working like a dog on it," said Mr. Helmcken, who has been awaiting a reply on the matter from Esquimalt-Saanich MP David Anderson.

Mr. Charlesworth expressed astonishment at the news. He termed Fernwood "a most important building" linked to Victoria's history.

Like Mr. Helmcken and Mr. Cotton, Mr. Charlesworth wondered aloud why Fernwood was to be demolished so far in advance of the apartment construction.

In Sketch

A spokesman for the architectural firm of Sager and Marshall said recently that the project was only in the sketch plan stage and a member of the city planning department confirmed that no plans had been submitted.

Fernwood was built in 1860 by Benjamin William Pearce, a Devonshire civil engineer who became surveyor-general of B.C. and a member of the Legislative Assembly. Mr. Pearce laid out the streets of much of Victoria.

The Pearce estate originally stretched from Fort Street north to Haultain and from Fernwood Road by Victoria high school east to Royal Jubilee Hospital. Stone for the two-storey manor was quarried on the estate.

Spode Tiles

The building was noted for its handsome fireplaces and their quality ceramic tiles, some by Spode. The Peares' daughter, Mary, who died in 1901 at the age of 21, had a fireplace in her room which was decorated with pictorial tiles depicting fables.

Mr. Pearce died in 1902. His second wife, Sarah Jane, died in 1954 in her 101st year, attended until her death by five servants. She left an estate of $290,000.

The house and its oak-covered grounds were sold to St. Margaret's School, which used the land as a playing field. School caretaker Ernest Osborne and his wife occupied Fernwood for 11 years until moving out recently.

'Quality'

Fernwood is slightly younger than Victoria's oldest buildings: Hemlock House, built in 1852, and Craigflower Manor, raised in 1856. But it is older than two better-known structures: Point Ellice House (1867) and Emily Carr House (1863).

"Sheer age isn't too important," Mr. Cotton said Saturday, "but when you get something of quality..."

"A lot of people have a great interest in Fernwood," Mr. Cotton said.

"Jack Dalibard, the federal government's chief restoration architect, had a look at it last summer. He thought it was a most unusual and important building, worth hanging onto."

Mr. Cotton said Fernwood had "historical, geographical and architectural significance for Victoria."

Last week Mr. Cotton saw 103-year-old Orchard House torn down in the 600 block Michigan, making way for an apartment building.

Like Bond

He likened Victoria's old buildings to "a bond in the bank — once you've spent it, you haven't got it any more."

Mr. Cotton and Mr. Charlesworth were instrumental in saving Esquimalt's old garrison buildings from demolition last year. The former officers' residences are to become the home of the Community Arts Council.

Both Mr. Cotton and Mr. Charlesworth suggested that Fernwood could be used in conjunction with the proposed apartment development.

"Some consideration should be given to incorporating Fernwood with the apartments," said Mr. Charlesworth. He suggested it might become a social centre.

"There must be a purpose in saving old homes," he said. "The future apartment tenants might be delighted to have a meeting place like this."

Saanich Odyssey

Council, Staff Scout Works Over 71 Miles

By DON GAIN

Saanich council and senior engineering staff took a 71-mile tour Saturday of more than $1,500,000 worth of pending public works projects in the municipality.

The projects consist of repairs and new construction of roads, sidewalks, drains, street lighting, land purchase and intersection improvements.

The group travelled in one bus and got a firsthand look at road and drainage problems. The next step is to decide what jobs will have priority in the public works budget.

ROAD BUDGET

The road budget alone will probably be cut from more than $1,250,000 to about $900,000.

The two biggest projects on the list are construction of four lanes on Carey Road from Douglas to Tillicum ($245,000) and four lanes on Lansdowne from the city boundary near Shelbourne to Foul Bay Road ($221,000).

Works approved in 1968 but not completed already have been approved for 1969. They include work on San Juan, east of Chartwell to east of San Pedro, for $19,000.

FROST DAMAGE

This job is bound to get priority because of frost damage caused by the recent cold spell. San Juan is easily the worst piece of travelled road in the urban part of the municipality.

Approval was given last month for the engineering department to proceed with plans for work on Interurban Road and for the revision of the entrance to Mt. Douglas Park.

Other pending projects inspected Saturday include road work on Cedar Hill Cross Road, Synod to Shelbourne, ($108,000); Shelbourne Street, Blair to McKenzie, road and drain, ($57,000); road work on Tyndall Avenue from Grandview to Hillcrest, ($34,500); road work on Burnside from Wascana to Davin, ($38,000).

Mental Health

Fund for Centre $2,000 So Far

The Rotary Club of Victoria has collected about $2,000 in the first week of a building fund drive, D. A. Nash said Saturday.

Funds will be used to aid in constructing a new White Cross Centre for the Canadian Mental Health Association.

The present White Cross Centre, a six-room, two-storey building at 2316 Lee, provides social and recreational services for about 120 members each year.

Cars Slowed By Washout

Saanich public works crews were called out Saturday night to make temporary repairs to Gordon Head Road at Arboretus.

Saanich police said a washout on the road slowed traffic for a while, but the road was not closed.

Permanent repairs will be made later.

Some 22 persons every day visit the centre, to talk, work on handicraft projects or just sit quietly. Activities include dancing, bowling and parties.

Supervisor Mary Rowles also arranges gatherings for the patients at Bay Pavilion and provides tickets for symphony and organ concerts.

The centre is a haven for former mental hospital patients who are attempting to rejoin society.

"PLACE OF ASSISTANCE" One such member wrote of it as "a place of assistance, refuge and peace for those, like me, who seemed to have lost all hope."

The goal of CMHA for the centre is a new building with more space, lots of light and no stairs to climb.

The Rotarians are sponsoring a car raffle to raise funds for the building.

A site for the proposed building has not been determined, but centre officials are hoping it can be built near Jubilee Hospital.

Freak Winds Now Breeze

The hurricane-force winds of up to 80 miles an hour which lashed Victoria Friday night died down Saturday, and today Victorians can expect a moderate breeze of about 15 miles an hour from the southwest, the weather office says.

Skies will be cloudy with a few sunny periods, and the temperature will rise slightly today, according to the forecast.

A weather office official said a vast low-pressure area off the Queen Charlotte Islands caused freak wind, snow and rain throughout the Pacific Northwest.

On Friday night, the west coast of Vancouver Island took the worst thumping as winds reached 83 miles an hour, and 3½ inches of rain fell overnight.

In central Island communities, rain turned to snow, with 18 inches blanketing the Lake Cowichan area.

Comox reported 2½ inches of rain by 4 p.m. Saturday. Winds gusting up to 65 miles an hour were recorded, and two inches of rain soaked the northern Island community of Port Hardy.

Damage throughout the storm area was reported slight.

Despite 64-mile-an-hour winds registered at the Gonzales Heights weather station and 80-mile-an-hour winds at the Trial Island light station, no major damage was reported in Victoria.

Ontario Orangeman:

Bilingual Demands Undermining Servant Confidence

Bilingual requirements of the Official Languages Act are undermining the confidence of civil servants, Carl W. Smith of Kitchener, Ont., said here Saturday.

What chances would anyone from Western Canada have to get a position with the federal government in Ottawa if they had to speak French? Mr. Smith asked. They might not need French in their work at all, but still they must speak it.

Mr. Smith, grand master of the Loyal Orange Association of Canada, spoke to about 50 Orangemen in Victoria Orange Hall.

"English is being phased out," he said. "In Ontario, where they already have bilingual schools, the French now are agitating for all-French schools."

He said the idea of a Canadian envoy to the Vatican, could have no basis but a religious one.

Mr. Smith said he was concerned about decreasing interest in keeping the crown and Queen as symbols of Canada. The monarchy had a stabilizing influence on the country, he said.

"Our order exists in Canada to preserve our British heritage," Mr. Smith said.

While Orangemen worked for civil and religious liberty, their primary purpose was to preserve "loyalty to the crown," he said.

Mason Licensing Scored

Cold Bares Bunglers

A Victoria contractor charged Saturday that municipalities throughout B.C. are granting "licences to steal" to people posing as tradesmen.

"Anyone at all can get a licence for $15 or $20 without proof of ability, and the recent cold spell proved the folly of this," said H. A. Ormiston, chairman of the Vancouver Island municipalities at a meeting several months ago that tradesmen's licences should be issued only to qualified tradesmen or persons hiring qualified men.

"There was lots of publicity about people lining up for Presto-logs," he said. "An interesting question would be this: Just how many of these people got home only to find they couldn't burn the logs because their fireplace-like ornaments — I won't call them fireplaces — were poorly constructed?"

Mr. Ormiston said he had heard of many complaints concerning faulty fireplaces.

The masonry contractors failed to convince the Vancouver Island municipalities at a meeting several months ago that tradesmen's licences should be issued only to qualified tradesmen or persons hiring qualified men.

"The only thing we are after is a minimum standard," Mr. Ormiston said.

The only B.C. municipality demanding proof of qualification before granting licences is Prince George. Mr. Ormiston referred to it as "the only enlightened municipality in the province."

"The municipalities believe it's a case of buyer beware. When they hand out licences the way they do, shouldn't it be a case of municipalities beware?"

He said he looks at it this way: "When the municipality grants a licence, it should accept part of the responsibility for what the applicant is competent to do."

Others Tame After St. Laurent

By EUGENIA SHEPPARD

PARIS — The only bad thing about the new Yves Saint Laurent collection is that it happened on the first afternoon of the Paris collections. After Yves everything else may seem a little tame.

Little Girls Love False Tresses

ENCINO, Calif. (AP) — Stringy-haired little girls, following in the fashionable footsteps of their mod mummies, are becoming curly haired cuties in minutes. The trick? False hair pieces, of course. "Little girls love to copy their mothers," says Bernie Safire, 35, who sells miniature tresses at his children's beauty salon in this Los Angeles suburb.

Now instead of dragging mommy's expensive wig out the back door, seven-year-old Susie can wear her own.

Long, long braids or a shiny new pony tail that won't struggle like her real hair cost $10 each. For $16.50, Shirley Temple curls are available. The tiny tresses are made of adult European hair.

Symphony Conductor's Wife Busy

Ball Gown Personal

By JUDY JENKINS

Choosing a new ball gown can be a frustrating experience for the woman who wants a dress that is just right for her alone.

The discerning woman may want the gown to look as though it were custom-made for her.

Agnes Gati's gowns are custom-made — for her personality and figure. She designs and sews them herself.

Each gown is unique and personal, including the one she will wear Friday night to the Symphony Ball at the Empress. The gown will be new and graceful — and a surprise.

Mrs. Gati, wife of conductor Laszlo Gati, is keeping the new creation a secret until the ball.

Designing, once her profession, now is her main occupation. She designs and makes all her own clothing and most of that worn by her two daughters.

She designed for the movie industry for two years in Budapest, Hungary, before she and her husband moved to Montreal 12 years ago.

She then worked for a clothing manufacturer in Montreal 10 years. "The material gives me the basis for the design," Mrs. Gati said. "Every fabric is a little different."

She sees designing as her expression of creative thoughts. "I see material, which is a dead piece. When I make a dress, I have the feeling that I gave it life."

Creative people are often unhappy, Mrs. Gati said. Many of the musicians she has met through her husband's orchestra have had hard lives, and she isn't sure she wants her children to follow in their parents' steps. "Both of them have taken piano lessons, but they don't like to practise. I won't push them. Music often involves a lonely, unhappy life," she said.

Taking care of her family and home includes many long days and nights, and Mrs. Gati has little time for a career. Still, she is considering returning to her work, although maybe not right away.

Of current styles, she said, "The very new things are just for the young." She doesn't think very short clothes are good for anyone older than the mid-20s.

"The latest fashions are mostly designed for young women. They're fun clothes. Mature women should strive for elegance," Mrs. Gati said.

"A woman should adapt fashion to what looks best on her, so she will be elegant," she said.

"Just because fashion says a woman should be flat-cheeked, doesn't mean you have to get rid of your bust," she said. "You work with what you have."

Mother Spends $800

Hijacking Phobias Enrich Cabbies

MIAMI (AP) — A Jamaican woman who was afraid of being hijacked to Cuba if she took a plane from Miami to Harrisburg, Pa., took a cab part of the way for $800.

Eugene (Tiny) Cohen, a 265-pound, six-foot-four cab driver, said he met his fare when another driver who had picked up the well-dressed woman and her four children refused to make the trip.

At first, Tiny said, they tried to compute the meter rate, then settled on $800, "Cash in advance," he said.

She said she was afraid of being hijacked to Cuba, the children were afraid and so was her husband whom she said, "told me to take a taxi," Cohen said.

"I told her she ought to take bus or the railroad," said Tiny. "I got witnesses. All the guys heard me."

She produced $400 after a brief trip to the ladies room and told Tiny she could wire for the rest and they could pick it up in Atlanta.

So Tiny picked up a relief driver, Bernie Brownstein, rented a station wagon because his boss decided the 1-278 miles to Harrisburg was too far for Tiny to take the cab, and drove to Atlanta where they picked up the other $400.

"She paid for the gas, too," said Tiny, "all expenses." Then they ran into snow. "The lady said we'd made a bargain and we had to take her, but I said, 'Lady, if you don't take a train, you'll get there in a pine box.'"

In Chattanooga, Tenn., the woman and her well-behaved children let go their end of the bargain and boarded a train. The drivers never asked her name and didn't make a refund.

They left the rented station wagon, skipped thoughts of hijackers and took a plane home. According to Tiny they made about $150 each.

Plywood Log Pond To Slip Long Trip

By JUDY JENKINS

It's a long way through a plywood mill, especially if you go the way of the logs.
 Skinning, shaving, chopping, drying, patching, gluing and pressing—that's the course a log follows through B.C. Forest Products Victoria plywood division.
 The log starts in the log pond and ends in a boxcar or ship on the way to market. Some 12,000 panels of plywood, usually four by eight feet, are sent on their way each day.
 Working to capacity, as it is now, the mill operates 24 hours a day, five days a week, to produce 3,120,000 panels of plywood each year.
 BCFP employs more than 1,100 persons in Victoria. Of that number, some 24 or 25 women work in the plywood mill. Although many of the women have been in the mill almost since it opened, their jobs are being filled by men when they retire or quit.

Every Job in Mill

"We haven't been rehiring women," Marc Close, personnel manager, said. "Whoever we hire must be able to do every job in the mill."
 "Provincial regulations now prohibit women from lifting more than limited weights. If we hired more women, they could only do one or two specific jobs," he said.
 Among the jobs women do is patching veneer. Hilda Lewis has been in the mill nearly 16 years and has operated a patching machine about five years.
 When she first started in BCFP, Mrs. Lewis went through most of the different jobs, including a belt sander, before working her way to patching.
 She said her work is interesting, and it pays well—$3.08 an hour, with an additional 10 cents for afternoon shift. "I put a son through college while I've been working here," Mrs. Lewis said.
 Mrs. Sonja Jensen is another patcher who has been with the mill 10 years. "It's a good job," she said. She, too went through most of the steps in the mill. The two women, like all mill employees, are members of the IWA.

Logs Cut to Size

The plywood process starts with Douglas fir and balsam logs, which are cut into specified lengths, usually eight feet, before the bark is removed.
 From the barker a log goes via a lathe charge to a spindle, where the spinning log is peeled by a lathe into a continuous sheet of veneer.
 Sliding along a conveyor belt, the sheet passes under one of two green veneer clippers, where an operator chops out defects in the wood and trims the sheet to size, usually four feet. The unusable part of the veneer goes to a chipper, which will prepare it for pulp.
 Stacks of veneer panels are carted off to pass through dryers. Three huge dryers reduce the moisture content to 5 per cent. After the drying process, the panels are piled according to grade, or quality.
 The dried panels go to veneer patchers, where knots and other minor flaws are cut out and replaced with almond-shaped, tight-fitting wooden patches.

Waterproof Glue

On to the glue spreader, where a sheet of balsam veneer is covered on both sides with waterproof glue. Sheets of Douglas fir are laid with the grain at right angles on either side of the balsam. The resulting three-ply panel is quarter-inch plywood.
 The panel is subjected to temperatures of 300 degrees and 200 pounds of pressure per square inch in the press to cure the glue. Then sizing saws trim the sides and ends.
 Half of the plywood is marketed unsanded. The rest goes to drum sanders and then a panel patcher, where flaws in the face veneer are filled with plastic wood or patched.
 The panels are graded again and resanded as necessary. The final step is wrapping bundles of panels in paper and fastening them with steel straps.
 About 65 per cent of the plywood is shipped in boxcars and trucks to domestic markets, and the other 35 per cent goes by ship to foreign markets.

Spring shoes from Italy . . .

After flapping around town in rubber boots for over a month . . . it was really exhilarating to us to pop into Munday's for a look at some of their new spring shoes. . . The Bandolinos had just arrived from Italy . . . just being unpacked, in fact, so we were probably one of the very first viewers. We like these new styles immensely. . . Two features which struck us were the broad straps spanning the instep on some of the models, and the generally higher heels, which are nonetheless broad, and quite interestingly shaped. . . "Bencano," in navy or bone kid, is out low at the sides for a graceful look. It has a wide strap with ornamental silver buckle, higher heel. . . "Susy," also sporting a strap, is a spectator type shoe in brown and white with a fringed trim. . . "Zoe," a flat-heeled shoe, carries out the new "layered" fashion theme, being made in overlapping shades of tan, bone, light and dark beige on the vamp, tan sides, and nether trim. . . "Pastore" is a T-strap with spectator toe and punch trim . . . comes in cafe au lait and light beige combination, or all navy. . . "Fino," in bone and tan, is a low-heeled sling with wide strap and gold buckle. . . Some very nice high-heeled sandals in gold kid, bone or black patent, and summery shades of pink, lemon or green calf. . . Munday's, 1293 Douglas St., 383-2211.

New at Wilson's from Europe . . .

You really expect to find something special in imported clothes when you visit Wilson's . . . and you won't be disappointed if you drop in now and new arrivals from some of Europe's glamor spots. . . Several of the dresses we saw the other day are from Vienna. . . A happy combination of casualness and elegance. . . There's a sleeveless wool knit in a loose weave . . . white ground with blue and brown embroidered pattern, and two-belt and band around the neck. . . size 12. . . and a similar dress in navy and red, size 10. . . $35. . . If you've ever sighed for a really smart dress in a size 20, you'll want to see the royal blue pure wool jersey with short sleeves and discreet detailing of rose and white stitching around the V-neck and bodice front. . . beautifully made, and well in bounds price-wise, at $85. . . Another Viennese import is fine printed wool in a pattern of big, blurry roses. . . short sleeves and the flattering cowl neckline. . . A fine twisted mohair dress . . . sleeveless with V-neck cardigan jacket comes from Florence, and we think it's a beauty. . . Lovely shades of blue in a hand-screened design. . . ### Perfume for your Valentine . . .

Why do so many of our menfolk, bless 'em, enjoy giving us perfume . . . especially for Valentine's Day? . . . Because it's the greatest tribute they can pay to our femininity. . . a compliment to our attractiveness. . . and their discernment! . . . If you suspect your man of having perfume on his mind this coming week, do contrive to let him know that Douglas Pharmacy is THE place to go for the biggest, most complete selection of perfumes and toiletries in all of Victoria. . . All the famous names you've ever heard of in imported perfumes . . . plus some which may be new to you because they haven't been available elsewhere in these climes. . . One which comes to mind is "Zen" . . . from Japan, no less, and brand new on this continent, though lovely Japanese women have been wearing it for years. We made first acquaintance last week, and are enchanted with this delicate, understated fragrance, as hauntingly beautiful and ethereal as a Japanese scroll painting. . . (There's a liquid eye-liner in this line too which you should look into yourself. . . it applies beautifully and dries to a lovely matte finish.) Also cologne, soap and dusting powder. . . Capucine perfumes and colognes from France are also exclusive to Douglas. . . The "Graffiti" and "Parce Que" fragrances are delightful. . . Douglas Pharmacy, 1672 Douglas St., 386-1641.

Saint Laurent's gypsy evening gowns, made like patchwork quilts, won applause at the Paris fashions showings.

H of G perm sale continues on . . .

We've just ploned for an appointment for a new permanent at House of Glamour . . . and are now waiting impatiently for the wonderful lift such an experience invariably gives our winter-jaded spirits. . . not to mention our appearance! . . . Because of January's unpeppable weather, H of G have extended their permanent wave sale until the end of this month. . . very considerate of them, we think, and a grand opportunity for all of us to save money on our beautifying. . . All H of G's perms, body waves and conditioners . . . including the sensational new Champagne Curl perm . . . are now on special. . . so if your hair has reached the droopy stage and you feel you could face life better with a new, lasting hair style that you won't need to fool around with, we suggest you phone for an appointment soon as possible. . . Starting on Monday, and for one week only, they're also having a clearance sale of wigs and hairpieces. . . Not a great many, mind you, but you may well find just what you need. . . And Danny Hajnal has asked us to tell you that if you've any hair problems, he'll be happy to talk to you about them . . . without obligation. . . House of Glamour, 658 View St., 386-6128.

Fur coats for men . . . including mink . . . have been selling well in New York.

The first breath of spring . . .

Long bodices attached to short pleated or flared skirts take us back to our flapper days . . . but they're big in fashion this spring of 1969. . . and as fresh and cute and young as all get-out. . . We saw some nice examples of this new fashion last week at the Madam and Eve Shop . . . where they were busy hanging up the first of the new spring dresses to arrive since the January sale just about emptied the racks at M & E. . . We think you should see these Jonathan Lagan dresses. . . There's a printed silk jersey in red and white with long torso, box-pleated skirt, white collar and ditto cuffs at the wrist-length sleeves. . . Another printed silk jersey has a slight blouson effect to the long bodice, and short flared skirt. . . Other cute styles in printed jerseys, too. . . A sleeveless dress in 100% washable polyester is dark brown with white stand-up collar and belt. . . but you can also have it in navy and white. . . These have a nice, crisp, spring-time look. . . Just the thing to span the seasons in. . . Almost medieval in mood is the apricot crepe dress with dmiel skirt, stand-up collar and sleeves flaring out before being gathered in at the wrist. . . Diagon and wool mixtures, in pink, lime or mauve, are double-breasted with collarless V-neckline. . . Madam and Eve Shop, Trousseau Alley, 383-1177.

Spanish designer Portegaz used an open-work design of brass leaves to hang together the top and bottom of a cotton dress.

Say it sweetly with Welch's . . .

Even though people nowadays seem to buy all manner of gifts for Valentine's Day, candy is still a top favorite with every gal from eight to 80. . . and beyond, for all we know! . . . It's a sweet way of saying "I like you. . . I love you. . . I think you're wonderful." . . . which is what any Valentine worthy of the name should say. . . Welch's chocolates are all of these. . . and to add to the gala of the occasion, you can get them in special Valentine heart-shaped boxes. . . be flowered and be-ribboned. . . ## ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: Our 14-year-old son is a little on the smart aleck side. He and his father are forever arguing. I am beginning to wonder who is at fault.

Last night my husband walked over to the chair where Buford was sitting and jerked the pillow from under his head. Buford's head hit the back of the chair and he bit his tongue. He yelled so loud the neighbors in the next apartment began to knock on the wall with a broom. An hour later my husband yanked the footstool from under Buford's feet. At that point I took my husband aside and told him he should have asked the boy politely for the pillow and the footstool. His answer was, "The kid is not polite to me and I'll be darned if I'll cater to him. I'm going to give him the same treatment he dishes out."

One Parent Against Other

Then my husband accused me of being on the boy's side and reminded me of the column you wrote about kids who play one parent against the other. I need to know if I am right or wrong. Ann—

CAUGHT IN BETWEEN
Dear Caught: Parents who complain about smart-mouth kids would do well to listen to themselves talk to their children. Youngsters speak as they are spoken to.

Your husband's behavior is juvenile. He should be setting an example for his son, not playing tit for tat. And you can tell the big baby I said so.

Dear Ann: Our next-door neighbors are fine people and we love them dearly. The problem is their two dogs. They take them every place. They are well-behaved miniature poodles but they are still dogs. Several evenings a week we get together at our house to discuss the events of the day. We always end up having coffee and a snack in our kitchen. I'm a good pastry cook and I always have a delicious cake or pie or some cookies on hand. Four nights out of five last week, these neighbors fed my pastries to their dogs—right in front of me.

Be Prepared for Dent

This really burns me up but I don't know if I should say anything. What do you say?—CHEF FOR POODLES
Dear Chef: If it burns you up, say something. But be prepared for a dent in your relationship. People who behave that way think more of their dogs than they think of their friends and they'll let you know it.

Dear Ann: My sister lives on the coast with a man to whom she is not married. To make matters worse, she has two lovely children, both teenagers.

I want to see my sister and the children, but I refuse to stay in that house unless the man moves out while I am there. Wouldn't you think she could ask her lover to stay somewhere else for a week? I suggested it and she said no. Should I cancel my trip? I miss those kids like crazy.—AUNTIE MAME

Dear Mame: Go. And stay in a nearby motel. I agree with you that your sister's living arrangement is disgraceful, but you have no right to impose your standards on her.

Lovelier You: Any Look

By MARY SUE MILLER

The experts foresee spring fashions continuing in the trend begun last fall. That is no one look, only the way you want to look. Or how you pull together what you wear to express your own fashion credo.

To meet you halfway, designers now work toward highly individual, cohesive collections rather than groups of unrelated ideas. Still, there seems to be a universal feeling for the soft, casual, luxurious and feminine. As witness these comers for day wear:

• Shapes are the softest. Clothes drape close to the body and move with it.

• Hemlines—more of the same.

• A switch is on from

Nag Nag Nag Nag Nag

As I was telling my husband the other night, "This story is without a doubt the most ridiculous thing I've ever read. Are you listening?"

(He nods) "More than a million husbands leave their homes and literally disappear every year. This prime reason for abandoning their family, home and job is nagging. This is followed by financial worries and depression over their jobs."

"I ask you is that crazy? Women don't nag any more. Sit up straight, dear. Do you want to grow up to be a bell ringer? Why I can't remember when was the last time I nagged at you?"

"It was five minutes ago," he said, turning the page. "You nagged me to turn up the furnace."

"That wasn't nagging," I said. "I just suggested it was so cold in here I was afraid to go to sleep."

"Are you kidding?" he replied. "This house breeds flies all winter."

"Which reminds me," I said, "when are you going to buy a new suit?"

"What's that got to do with flies?"

"Don't change the subject. This is going to come as a flash, Charlie, but the Hans Brinker trousers are O-U-T. I think that's why we never go any place or do anything . . . you're insecure because of your clothes."

"Where do you want to go?"

"You always say that. Sure, it's all right for you. You get into town where the lights are bright and the traffic is busy and there's gaiety and life. I sit here and make jockey shorts for Ken dolls and eat leftovers. Did it ever occur to you that I want to be more than just another pretty face?"

"You're overcompensating," he said, folding his paper. "There you go! That's the thanks a woman gets for scrimping and trying to give you status. Did you know I rode with the car windows up all summer so people would think we could afford air conditioning? You know what's the matter with you? You're sore because you let your insurance lapse."

"Every time you nag you bring that up," he snapped.

***

"I am not nagging. I am only discussing. Can't we ever have a friendly discussion? They're your children too, you know."

"When did we switch to children?"

"Well, it wasn't my idea. You know, just once when we're discussing things I wish you'd come right out and say what you really think."

"What are you talking about?"

***

"I'm fat. Why don't you say it? If you'd be honest once in a while and say, 'You oughta lose 20 pounds before you become a 4-H project,' I'd do it. But no, you just sit there and . . . Where are you going with that suitcase?"

"Out after a pack of cigarettes."

"That's weird. He doesn't even smoke."

***

"I'm not nagging. I am only discussing. Can't we ever have a friendly discussion? They're your children too, you know."

"When did we switch to children?"

Courtroom Parade

Pane Stops Sore Head

Tony Madam almost earned the distinction Friday of becoming the first human night deposit at the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, Government and Yates.

According to evidence presented in Central Magistrate's Court, Madam came close to making a headlong entry through a closed window when he was thrown to one side by a man he had attacked.

His head broke the window. Police were called and Madam was charged with common assault. He pleaded guilty and was remanded in custody by Magistrate J. A. Byers to Feb. 17 for a pre-sentence report.

Evidence disclosed that Madam, of no fixed address, punched a stranger in the face for no apparent reason and challenged him to a fight. The victim was guiding an elderly man to a bus stop when the attack occurred at 11:40 p.m. Madam had been drinking.

Friday was a bad day for 50-year-old Herman Hoblen. Finding himself homeless, intoxicated and with 21 cents to his name, he stole a radio from a Johnson Street hotel room and was caught immediately afterward.

Saturday was also a bad day. He pleaded guilty to a theft charge, listened to Crown evidence that it was his 18th conviction for stealing, and was sentenced to six months in jail.

Harry McLaughlin, 53, of 317 Simcoe, was remanded to Feb. 17 for pre-sentence report after pleading guilty to stealing two eight-ounce bottles of vanilla extract and two cans of salmon from the Safeway store on Simcoe Street.

Average Salary Inadequate

Mortgage Help Not That Beneficial

The provincial government's plan to assist young families with home-buying seems to be out of reach for those who need the help most, according to local realtors.

It would take payments of more than $200 a month to handle even a modest new home, and statistics show the average wage-earner in B.C. made $472 a month, according to realtor Harry Foster.

Real estate men here say it will be impossible for young married men to meet the payments, which will run to 44 per cent of the average income. The NHA standard is that home payments should take only 27 per cent of income.

A local real estate dealer said that under prevailing conditions it would cost about $23,000 for a new house and lot. An NHA mortgage for 25 years at 9 per cent on $18,000 would cost $149.04 a month.

He said the provincial government's second-mortgage plan, at the same interest and for the same term, would cost $41.40 for $5,000.

Property taxes would be $400 a year, less the homeowner grant, and should cost a $20.80 a month. For prompt payment the government would refund $4.16 a month.

Thus the two-bedroom home would cost $211.24 a month. If the average income of $472 is used as a yardstick this leaves $264.92 before food, clothing, income tax or any other bills are met.

To meet the NHA-recommended 27 per cent of income for housing payments, the wage-earner would need an income of $800 a month.

Realtor Don Whyte said the scheme might be fine for young married couples where both were making good incomes, but was out of the question for young married people with children.

Fund Seen as Indian Catalyst

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Indians could take a five-year leap forward over their counterparts in other provinces if a fund announced in Premier W. A. C. Bennett's budget speech Friday works out well, says an Indian spokesman.

Guy Williams, president of B.C.'s Native Brotherhood said in an interview he and other leaders are looking forward with anticipation to further details on how the fund will be administered.

Premier Bennett told the legislature the government plans to set up a $25,000,000 perpetual fund to provide immediate and continuing assistance to Indians in cultural, educational and economic development.

Interest accrued by the fund will be allotted for various projects involving betterment of Indian conditions while the fund itself will be invested in school and hospital construction bonds around the province.

Mr. Williams said Indians in the province will suggest that an advisory body of native people be set up to look into the best way of using the money.

"We would not want to administer the money until we had enough experienced Indians to do the job thoroughly," the

Space for Leisure Shrinking Fast in Canada

Biggest outdoor recreation need now and for the near future is accessible space "to get away from it all" within an hour or two's drive from cities and crowds.

The impending crisis is not in total space, but in effective space, one to three hours' drive from major urban centres, says James Woodford, executive director of Federation of Ontario Naturalists.

But "we're letting the space slip away," warns Robert Collins in an article in the current pollution-conservation issue of the Imperial Oil Review.

"Canada seems to have the doubtful honor of destroying more wild landscape faster with more waste, with fewer people to do it, than any other country on earth," writes former Victoria parks branch

Outdoors

with Alec Merriman naturalist R. Y. York Edwards in Canadian Audubon magazine. He left the B.C. service for a position with the Canadian Wildlife Service.

Thirty years from now Canadians may have abundant leisure, money and mobility, an overwhelming urge to flee from cities and crowds, but nowhere to go, notes Collins.

By the year 2000 about 36,000,000 Canadians — 90 per cent of us — will live in urban anthills of steel, glass, plastic and concrete.

Montreal's 7,000,000 will sprawl in a 35-mile radius as far as the satellite cities, Joliette, Sorel and Valleyfield. Another 4,500,000 will occupy Metropolitan Toronto and its fringe — a human fan spreading 20 miles out from the existing downtown core.

Beyond it the Golden Horseshoe, embracing the north shore of Lake Ontario, will be solid with people from Oshawa to Niagara and north to Barrie. Another million will live in each of Edmonton, Calgary, Winnipeg and Ottawa; 2,200,000 in British Columbia's Lower Mainland.

The yearning to run in grass, sniff damp earth, fish in a brook or picnic among rustling leaves and bird songs will become an obsession. The work week will be only 30 hours or less, and with human work rather a luxury, moonlighting will be forbidden.

We'll be better educated and have twice as much disposable income. There will be high-speed transit of several kinds, with superb motor vehicles and freeways still the mainstays of most families.

"Thus, while our numbers will have doubled, our demand for outdoor recreation will have tripled. As well, many of the 320,000,000 vacation-hungry Americans will be surging over our border.

There'll still be elbow room in the Rockies, Saskatchewan, Newfoundland, and parts of the Precambrian Shield. There'll still be plenty of Arctic. But as Canadian author and naturalist Fred Bodsworth put it: "Three million square miles of boreal spruce forest and Arctic tundra are no consolation to the people who seek the thrills of hiking under towering pines or paddling a wilderness waterway within a one-day's drive of home."

Major tests of green belts, conservation areas, existing and potential outdoor recreation areas will come as cities begin to surround them.

"We have to use the country, manage it, protect it, care for it, cherish it and love it," says Vancouver Island author and conservationist Roderick Haig-Brown.

If we heed his and similar warnings we must immediately calculate our long-range recreation needs and our remaining accessible space. Then we must co-ordinate our efforts and get the property before it is lost forever to a bulldozer.

The Canada Land Inventory, a nationwide Agricultural and Rural Development Act project now classifying a quarter of the country in terms of agriculture, forest, wildlife and recreational suitability, should provide some guidelines by 1970.

But already, thanks to a masterful U.S. recreation study and preliminary returns from a Canadian outdoor recreation study which will be ready by 1971, we have some guidelines.

In Canada and in the United States, pleasure driving and walking account for nearly half the total outdoor pleasure activity. But whatever their pleasure, most people want water to sit by, swim or fish in, ski across, dive under or run their boats over.

To generalize: most people want handy land and water space for relatively simple activities, says Collins. "They just want a taste of nature at the end of a gridding day or week. Naturally, a country full of footpaths beside water isn't the whole answer. There must be many categories of open space.

"Every scrap of open space, no matter how small, no matter whether its present use is non-recreational, must be considered either for full-time recreational or for multiple use: unused railroad rights of way, military properties, parts of Indian reservations (leased with the land's consent), fragments of land that were acquired but unused in getting highway rights of way, marginal farms being withdrawn from agriculture, abandoned quarries, unused sand pits," he emphasizes.

Waterways, too, should be made accessible to all. We must, as well, begin saving wilderness the way we preserve vanishing items in museums and pioneer villages, he advises.

Collins admits money is at the root of the problem.

However, he says, there are ways to ease the pain of high prices and still obtain land before the costs increase.

One is to buy land and lease it back to the farmer or other user until it is needed for recreation. Land might also be bought on the installment plan, with the buyer assuming the taxes immediately, taking over the property in stages and letting the owners stay on until the purchase is complete.

Another possibility is the scenic easement, providing recreational access to private land over a long term, with option to renew.

Donations are another source that few communities pursue.

There is a need for co-ordination and planning at high levels.

Some Canadian planners suggest Canada adopt a U.S. innovation — the Bureau of Outdoor Recreation, a research and co-ordinating body that serves as a catalyst to resource planning at state and federal levels.

Canada, so far, is nowhere near such organization. Each province has a number of departments and branches involved in outdoor recreation, with sometimes-lucidous results, says Collins.

In one province recreationists sought a particular park area while the highways department planned to run a four-lane highway through it.

"In urban localities with no regional plan, fringe zone land goes to speculators while city, township and county stand like outfields watching a fly ball drop between them," says Collins.

"Few Canadians understand or care about the recreation crisis. We cling to the outdoors with our gardens, lawns and window boxes. We migrate like lemmings to our summer cottages. Yet we grumble at tax money devoted to parkland.

"We see tangible values in sewers, highways and education, but not in the open space. The Americans have calculated that their outdoor recreation is a $20 billion-a-year market for goods and services, as well as being a replenishment for man's soul.

"Here, we still cling to the pioneer belief that the only good space is filled-up space; that the outdoors was made to be dug up, cleared of trees, off that concept, we are doomed to endless urban sprawl," he warns.

Opposition Wins Fisheries Point

OTTAWA (CP) — The opposition won a parliamentary victory Friday when it got the government to agree fishermen should have a say on an advisory board that would be set up to assist the proposed fresh-water fish marketing board.

A bill providing for establishment of the marketing board was thus cleared by the Commons for third and final reading, expected Monday.

Under an amendment proposed by Lloyd Crouse (PC—South Shore), one-third of the membership of the advisory board would be composed of people actively engaged in the fresh-water fishery as fishermen.

The opposition accepted a sub-amendment proposed by David Anderson (L—Esquimalt-Saanich) providing the one-third be made up of "persons or representative of persons" so engaged.

Seedhouse Chess Winner

Victorians Turn to Speed

By RAY KERR

After playing nine consecutive weeks of city championship competition, Victoria Chess Club members last week took a breather with a special speed tournament.

And tournament director Edward Seedhouse showed — as Nanaimo's Fred Schulz had done earlier this year — that chess officials can still prove tough in competitions.

Playing in a 16-player, five-round Swiss system, Seedhouse won his first games, then drew his final match to win the tournament undefeated.

FOUR EACH

Half a point behind him, with four each, came junior Daniel Scoones and John Reems, Scoones taking the runner-up spot on tie-break.

Scoones was somewhat unfortunate not to take it all. He was a piece up against Seedhouse only to lose in time control. Time is of great importance in this sort of play, as each man is allowed only 10 minutes for the whole game.

CLEAR FOURTH

Michael Manick, who drew with Seedhouse, finished a clear fourth with 3½ points, followed by Frank Hasse, Len Hall, Alan Lane and Bruce Fernell, three each; Charles Dalziel, Ray Vickery, Fred Jacobs and George Hill, two apiece; Alf Sheard, George Glover, Brooke Stephenson and August Strodik, all one point.

Lane's finish in a tie for fifth place was the biggest surprise, as he's a former city champion, as is Seedhouse. Lane is also current leader in the 1968-69 championship stakes.

SPECIAL BENEFIT

The tournament was of special benefit to Seedhouse, Scoones and Lane, as the trio will be representing Victoria and Vancouver Island in the big Vancouver Open, slated for the Lower Mainland this week.

This will give Victoria probably its strongest mainland representation ever, since a few other club members and one or two non-members also plan to take part.

The Vancouver Open is the first major event on the 1969 B.C. chess calendar, being played at Renfrew Community Centre, 2929 East 22nd Avenue, Vancouver, this Saturday and Sunday.

Among those expected to participate are Burnaby Open champion Alan Hill of Vancouver, mainland grandmaster Duncan Suttles, B.C. Closed champion Peter Bijnias of Vancouver, and many others.

It will be of particular interest to see if a Victoria player can win it, since this feat has never been accomplished before.

The Week in Records

Retreads by Vinton Strike Gold

By KING LEE
Copying an original smash tune and making it a hit again is perhaps one of the most difficult things to do in the music world but Bobby Vinton and the Vogues seem to have the knack.

Vinton has been doing it for more than 10 years now, starting with his Blue Velvet and Blue on Blue to his current gold-record single, I Love How You Love Me.

His style appeals to such a wide age bracket, nothing gimmicky, nothing startling. He just simply picks up a past-hit ballad and sings it with a straight delivery, depending on his voice to appeal and sell.

It's the same way with the Vogues, whose success has just been in the past six months. Their last three hits, My Special Angel, Turn Around, Look At Me and Till, all have had varying degrees of success the first time around.

They employ the same basic formula as Vinton, singing it straight but adding harmony and using a big orchestra to their advantage.

One artist who surprised me with her last two singles is Aretha Franklin. She has a string of hits which are original and hers alone. Now she has added her versions of I Say a Little Prayer and The Weight to her winners.

When Dionne Warwick came out with the original version of I Say a Little Prayer in January, 1968, I conceded no one but Dionne could do justice to the Burt Bacharach song. Just nine months later, however, Aretha startled the public with her version, heavier and with a lot more soul. Both versions sold more than 1,000,000 copies.

Now she's taken the Jackie De Shannon hit of just a few months ago and given it just what it needs, her voice and her interpretation. It's not that Miss De Shannon isn't capable but, as they say, it isn't her bag.

What a shame that the Neil Diamond concert scheduled at the University of Victoria Tuesday had to be cancelled. Diamond is reportedly ill with pneumonia and will be unable to fulfill his commitment here.

If he had been able to appear he would have been the most talented entertainer to come to Victoria since Gordon Lightfoot — and that includes Tommy James and the Shondells, the Beach Boys and the Collectors.

According to a university spokesman there are no promises from Diamond's representatives for fitting him in later this year.

Hit LPs: The Live Adventures of Mike Bloomfield and Al Kooper is a double-album following up their great Super Session release. Montreal-born Oscar Peterson unveils his new quartet in The Great Oscar Peterson on Prestige! The pianist-leader, who works out of Toronto, works with Sam Jones, bass, and Bobby Durham, drums in what should be a listenable session. Lady Soul has a new album coming out, Soul '69. Take a listen to her cuts of Bring It on Home to Me, Gentle on My Mind and Elusive Butterfly. An extremely good blues group, the Buddy Miles Express, which consists of nine pieces, three saxes, two trumpets, two guitars, an organ and drummer Miles, have come out with Expressway to Your Skull.

The Rascals-Fredonia Suite is the group's latest album. Another big seller, potentially, is the Bee Gees' Odessa. Buffalo Springfield fans will consider Retrospective a must. It contains the group's best numbers. Near the Beginning is the name of the Vanilla Fudge album just out.

Percy Sledge and Sam Dave have put out "Best of" albums, which, to me, are the best values in the long run.

One last album worth mentioning because it contains cuts from the Rascals, Bee Gees, Cream, Buffalo Springfield, Vanilla Fudge and Iron Butterfly is called The Super Groups.

Hit Singles: Bobby Goldsboro tries again with Glad She's a Woman. Those Stormy people, the Classics IV, follow up with Traces. Odd thing about the Classics IV is that there are five in the group. Ed Ames has released a new one, Changing, Changing.

Those of us who go back far enough will remember the name Clyde McPhatter. He's still around and has a new one, Baby You've Got It. The Rascals' Heaven is likely to break into the Top 20 quickly.

Love's Things is the name of the Grass Roots' latest.

Letters to Kitte

Boy's Date Manoeuvres Must Be Disregarded

Dear Kitte: I like a boy very much. He shows he likes me by holding my hand at school, at lunch etc. But meanwhile he sort of seeks another girl. One time he put his arm around her and just left me. Then, when she had to turn off the road, to walk home alone, he asked me to walk on with him.

He showed he liked me, before he even knew who she was. I couldn't stand to lose him because he is getting a car in a month. Just thinking of them being together makes me want to cry. It doesn't bother him when he does these things but I get mad at him. Please tell me what to do. Tearful.

Less Romance
Dear Kitte: Don't be. Don't show that his date manoeuvres bother you. Be friendly, when he is paying attention to you. Be busy, happy, with other friends when he is not attentive. Perhaps he is trying to find his way around the date-world in young teens, too, and needs more friendship, less romance-seeking.

For Kitte Turmell's free leaflet Ours For Dates send a self-addressed stamped envelope with your request care of this newspaper. Kitte's date-guide includes pointers on how to handle date problems.

Dear Kitte: What's new high fashion in wedding clothes for a big ceremony? Nancy.

Dear Nancy: At the fabulous wedding of Miss Linda, daughter of actor Robert Hope and Mrs. Hope, to Nathaniel Greenblatt, the bride wore a white tulle gown, combining handkerchief top with turtleneck collar, jewelled girdle, and floor-length bouffant skirt of satin. Bridesmaids wore floor-length Edwardian gowns, silk, champagne-color. The bridegroom wore, Edwardian style, a top hat, and formal top-tail suit, in grey.

Worried Girl

Dear Kitte: I have a boy problem. Every time I go out with a boy he flirts with every girl there. The boy can be a perfect gentleman with all the other girls but it's not the same with me. Once or twice my date has left me stranded and I have had to call my mother. Please tell me why. Should I stop dating? I am 16½. Worried.

Dear Worried: Next time he asks you for a date say you'll be happy to accept on condition he treats you properly. Say you expect him to pay due attention, and escort you home. If he doesn't, let that be your last date with him.

Dear Kitte: This may seem silly to you but it's a very real problem to me. My little brother (age six) had always used a transistor radio and quite a few times ran the batteries out. He got his own radio but took the batteries from mine to play it. I asked if I could use his and my mother backed him up when he refused.

He talks back to my parents, uses bad language and gets away with it. Not a day goes by that he doesn't say how much he hates my father, etc. My other brother and I can hardly stand it. Please help. Sign me Upset.

Family Group

Dear Upset: Get together as a family group. Take turns on telling your grievances. Then take turns suggesting ways to solve your problems. Perhaps your brother can be given chores to do for pay or enough allowance to cover costs of batteries. All borrowing should be by mutual agreement and favors should be returned.

Parents should discipline for unruly conduct. One of the best ways is to send the offender to his room to think about his conduct, or give him the "silent treatment," ignoring him for a while.

Talent for Creativity Nurtured by Dreams

By KITTE TURMELL

Let's make February the month to get turned on — in school, that is. And what are you supposed to turn on? Our talent for creativity.

"But I don't have any," you may say. Yes you do. Everybody does, according to Dr. John Curtis Gowan of Northridge, California, an international authority on guidance for the gifted. He's now professor of education at San Fernando Valley State College. He says:

"This creativity won't do you any good until you do something about it. That doesn't mean you have to paint a mural or write a novel. You can also be creative in church work or family relations. And there's no better place for a teenager to be creative than in school. But you have to practice creativity to develop it."

"Such training is the proper function of the school," Dr. Gowan writes in his book, "Creativity: Its Educational Implications." How much you develop depends on a good deal on teacher-personality and a teacher-classroom behavior.

"So make the most from what you can gain from your teacher and class."

"One of the most important factors is an air of expectancy. Expect to do well. Dream a dream. My mother was convinced I'd go to Harvard, and I never questioned that, though none of my ancestors had gone through high school. But I made it, up to an Ed.D. degree."

"If your parents can't give you the dream, find a teacher or counselor, or some adult with breadth and enthusiasm who will inspire you. Learn to accept, so that you can learn to give to others later."

"But once you're turned on, don't turn into a devil or dictator. The worst thing you could do would be to create the wrong things."

Dr. Gowan explains that people on their way up the ladder sometimes feel disoriented. They want to become social swans, but still feel like ugly ducklings. This makes them aggressive, even hostile. The solution is to find creative ways to solve problems. If need be, get outside help to deal with them calmly and sensibly.

"If you have a high-powered IQ," I asked him, "does this put you under special strain? Or does it make it simple to be creative?"

Dr. Gowan feels it's a matter of balance. You must handle your energy like a heat pump, pushing the hot in one direction and the cold in the other. If the two of them mix, everything burns out. You'll burn out, too, if you don't strike a balance in your work and follow through.

"For me, and what I observe in others, strain results from emotional problems, not over-work. If you take a muscle and hold it tense for 15 minutes, you'll get a charley-horse. But if you stress it gradually, then relax it, there's no problem. Your heart does this year after year. The same thing applies to your nervous system."

"So avoid continued emotional stress."

Ottawa Tests Costly

By MAGNUS VERBRUGGE

We are fortunate to live in Canada. It is wonderful to enjoy the freedom we have. A freedom so many people in the world crave for but will never see.

I know because I once lived under Fascist dictatorship. And now, here in our free Canada, we see the growth of big government, government not just by elected members of Parliament but government by boards and commissions manned by friends of the government, rewarded for political favors with a nice job in the civil service.

Both Liberals and the NDP are committed to still bigger government. Both are committed to rising taxes and continued inflation to pay for it. In European socialist countries high taxes have resulted in a lower standard of living.

That is why in these countries, people do not own their own homes but must live in little boxes in apartment blocks.

The Hellyer report on housing points to a similar fate for Canada. Government operations are devouring the millions that once were available for mortgages at six per cent. Where can we obtain more funds? Any increase in taxes on big business, as advocated by the NDP, will stop the inflow of foreign capital and cause widespread unemployment.

The only other source of money is the consumer. Every Canadian wage-earner should realize that he is going to pay for any increase of government expenditure with higher income taxes, sales taxes and succession duties. And any citizen in this by-election should realize that a vote for the Liberal candidate is a vote for these higher taxes, whereas a vote for the NDP is a vote for Santa Claus.

With our vast natural resources, we can build Canada and improve life for our pensioners, retired civil servants and veterans.

If only Ottawa would stop its costly experiments for a few years and let Canada recover from the shock.

The Progressive Conservative party offers the only alternative to the present irresponsible government because we are determined to stop big government and raise mortgage funds instead.

We are committed to help the aged, to protect the weak and to treat the ill.

To do this, we must encourage the strong and the industrious to help themselves. We must join hard work with compassion. That is what we stand for.

A vote for your Progressive Conservative candidate is a vote for freedom and justice.

Socialism 'Dismal Failure' Free Enterprise Gives Proven Way of Life

By ERIC WINCH

The main issue in this election remains as always, the challenge between free enterprise and socialism.

I stand for free enterprise because, while it has its deficiencies, it is a proven way of life. Socialism is far from proven. In fact in the few areas where it has been tried, including Saskatchewan, it has been a dismal failure. I do not think we should lose sight of that fact in this campaign. The socialists had 17 years in which to produce the Utopia they promised for Saskatchewan. Utopia never came.

I stand for change and the challenge of change, surely the greatest challenge of our times. I believe, as I think Mr. Trudeau believes that as every policy, every law, is evolved and adopted, that there should be consultation.

Credit Side

It has been said that during a mere nine months in office the Trudeau government has accomplished nothing. Why is it then that since Mr. Trudeau was first nominated as the leader of the Liberal party this country has engaged in its greatest ever dialogue on politics?

Had the Liberal party achieved nothing else, this, surely, would have to be shown as a mark on the credit side of the ledger.

For the first time in many, many years, people from every walk of life are talking politics, discussing problems common to us all.

Typical is the current controversy on NATO. It happens to disagree with Postmaster General Eric Kierans on this issue. But I certainly do not disagree with Mr. Trudeau's decision to invite country-wide debate to see what other Canadians think before a final decision is made.

Critical Decision

Surely we must appreciate the opportunity of guiding our country, our government, to such a critical decision.

If I am elected to Parliament, I do not anticipate that I shall be able to make decisions pleasing to all men. To do that I would have to adopt a position of compromise.

Island Voters First To Judge Liberals

By T. C. DOUGLAS

On Monday the people of Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands will go to the polls. They will be the first Canadian voters since the last general election who have had an opportunity at the ballot box to express their feelings about the things that concern Canadians.

With their ballot they will not be able to elect a new government or to defeat Mr. Trudeau, the Liberal leader. Mr. Trudeau, however, will be returned to power last June with a big majority and will govern Canada for the next four years.

Voters will be able to register their protest at government stalling and inaction which has aggravated the many problems that we face.

Winter Works

They will be able to tell the government what the problem of 500,000 Canadians being out of work will not be eased by cancelling the winter works program.

They will be able to tell the government that old age pensioners cannot meet the spalling costs of living with a measly $1.50 a month pension increase.

They will be able to tell the government that a housing policy which excludes all those earning less than $8,500 a year from obtaining a home under NHA is just not good enough.

They will be able to tell the Liberal government that taxation policies which discriminate against ordinary working people and in favour of the well-to-do and the corporations, are unjust policies.

They will also be able to tell the Liberal government that studies and commissions and committees are not substitute for leadership.

During the past four months I have met with literally thousands of people in this constituency. They have a variety of concerns. Spiralling living costs, unjust taxation and inadequate pensions are foremost among them.

Now when you go to vote, you must ask yourself — do we want to bring these concerns to the forum of Parliament and fight for action to remedy them? Or do we want to add to the reinforcements of a government now stalled in a mire of inaction and inaction?

We have, gathering dust in Liberal government files, the Watkins Report on foreign ownership of Canadian industry. That report says that we have, perhaps, 15 years left in which we can still secure the future economic development of Canada for our children and our children's children, rather than for foreign investors.

Decision Needed

I suggest to you that we have had enough studies, commissions and committees to provide us with the guidelines for action for the next 20 years. We don't need dialogues, we need decisions. We need progress and not procrastination.

Byelection Battle In Final Stages

With the campaign for the Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands by-election in its final stages, the Colonist is providing the three candidates with a chance to make direct statements to voters.

Above are messages from Liberal Eric Winch, Conservative Dr. Magnus Verbrugge and NDP leader T. C. Douglas.

BAMBOO PLANTS (A.G., Victoria) — It is a fairly common thing for newly-planted bamboo plants to suffer a setback because of frost, and in view of the severe winter we have experienced, I am not surprised that the specimens you planted last October should be looking dried and withered now.

There is a good chance the roots have survived though, and in this case new growth should appear before May.

When a bamboo is cut down, either deliberately or by frost, the new growth will nearly always be overcrowded and congested, and it is usually necessary to thin it out, removing about half the number of canes in each clump.

BOTANICAL TERM (F.C., Crofton) — The letters fl. pl. following the name of a plant are an abbreviation for the words "florae pleno," meaning double flowers. For example, Prunus triloba fl. pl. is the double-flowered form of the ornamental flowering plum as opposed to the ordinary single flowered form.

DWARF LOBELIA (E.A.J., Sooke) — Lobelia is handled a little differently from the other half-hardy annuals which are sown from seed under glass or indoors. The seeds are started in the ordinary way, sown thinly in pots, but when the time comes for "picking off" (a gardener's term for transplanting the crowded baby plants from a pot to spaced-out positions in a box or seed flat) they are lifted and transplanted in little bunches rather than singly, with anywhere from four to eight of the seedlings in each bunch.

HOUSEPLANT PRIMULA (R.L., Duncan) — No variety of houseplant is very long-lived. Primula malacoides (Fairy Primrose) and P. sinensis (Chinese Primrose) cannot be held over and both should be discarded after they finish blooming. New plants are not overly difficult to raise from seed.

I imagine your gift plant is probably Primula obconica, which CAN be held over for one more season of bloom. It likes a shady, cool situation outdoors in summer and a sunny window of a really cool room in winter. Maintain the soil evenly but only just barely moist, never sloppy wet.

I should tell you this particular primrose has a rather sinister reputation for causing a skin rash. I suggest you keep a close watch on your hands and the hands of your family for a while, and if a rash should appear, get rid of your plant. Quite a few folks are allergic to Primula obconica, but the rash, while irritating, is not persistent and should clean up of its own accord when the plant is removed. Give it to someone who isn't sensitive to it.

EXHIBITION LEEKS (E.P., Victoria) — Leeks are not blanched in the later stages of growth like celery; the blanching process should commence as soon as the plants are set out in the garden.

One stunt much favored by exhibitors is to use old drain pipes for blanching, slipping one over the head of each plant. The standard pipe is too tall at first, so it is sunk into the ground to expose some of the leek foliage, and is eased up gradually as the plants grow taller. Some gardeners fill the pipe with clean, dry sand; others just use the pipes as is.

FRUIT TREE PRUNING — As in previous years, the Victoria Horticultural Society has arranged for two demonstrations of fruit tree pruning. This is by far the best way to learn this ancient art—watch the actual pruning and hear the explanations given by the demonstrators.

The first of these is scheduled for 2 p.m. Wednesday, Feb. 19, at the home of Mrs. J. L. Rennie, 4656 Pipeline Road. The second demonstration is for 2 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 22, in the garden of Mr. and Mrs. P. Raven, 1641 Fell Street, just off Oak Bay Avenue.

The pruning demonstrations will go ahead regardless of the weather, and the general public is invited.

Everybody Robbed

WASHINGTON — The crime problem in Washington, D.C., as everyone knows by now, is serious. And everyone is worried about it because it could have an effect on the national policies of the country.

It's very difficult for people to make decisions on the affairs of state when they are living in an atmosphere of apprehension and anxiety.

Let me explain what I mean:

The other day I was getting a briefing on America's defence posture from my good friend, Gen. A. B. Em at the Pentagon.

"The U.S. has never been stronger," in spite of everything, Gen. Em told me. "We've got hardware in every part of the globe, and while we're not looking for trouble, I assure you that there isn't a nation in the world, including you-know-who, who would mess with us. But, of course, our real business is peace."

"It's good to talk to someone who is neither a dove nor a hawk," I said.

"Without giving away any secret information, our missile sites right here in the continental United States could knock out anything the other side could send over."

An aide walked in. "I'm sorry to bother you sir, but your car has been stolen."

"My car?"

"Yes, sir. Right off the Pentagon parking lot."

"Of all the nerve," the general shouted. He put on his coat and said to me, "I'm sorry I have to break this up. And then to his aide, 'Let's go ahead with the bombing raid on the DMZ. And double the bomb loads.'"

I wandered over to the state department to see if I could talk a friend on the Middle East desk into having lunch. He was wrestling with the tricky situation out there.

"It's our policy to find a peaceful solution to this problem, making sure that neither the Arabs nor the Israelis feel they've won anything. But at the same time we must calm the fears of both parties and urge them to reconcile their differences."

Just then his secretary came in. "It's your wife on the phone." He picked it up. "Hello. What do you mean someone broke into the house? They took everything?"

"I know you wanted me to put bars on the windows... Yes, I'm coming home right away." He slammed down the phone.

"What about the position paper you were going to do on the crisis?" his secretary asked.

My friend was heading for the door. "The hell with the position paper. The Arabs and Israelis can kill themselves for all I care." And he walked out, slamming the door.

I had nothing better to do, so I decided to look up a pal at the department of housing and urban development. He was just going over plans for a large housing project for one of the major cities. "What we have to do is to give people decent housing," he said.

"Mr. Bostitch." A uniformed guard rushed in. "They just robbed the employees credit union downstairs and took $20,000 dollars."

"That does it!" said Bostitch as he tore up the plans into little pieces. "No more Mr. Nice Guy."

I was about to go back to my offices when I ran into a judge. "We must get to the root of crime and eradicate the causes of it," he said as we walked back to his court.

"Punishing people is not a solution for the long haul," in his chambers he said to his clerk, "Where's my robe?"

"Someone stole it during lunch."

Redfaced, the judge took his seat on the bench in his regular suit, and before the defence attorney could even make his plea in the first case, the judge slammed down his gavel and said, "Twenty years."

Heaven Grows

NASSAU (NANA) — Paradise Island is burgeoning. When I came to heaven last year there were but two hotels — the exclusive Ocean Club, tucked away from public view and the new Paradise Island Hotel, adjoining the casino.

Now, also flanking the casino, is the just-completed Briannia. And other hotels are mushrooming all over the place.

Huntington Hartford lost several of his millions when he was sole owner of the place. But Gene Barrett, who is an executive for Resorts International told me they have plans to make the island "a total resort," with accommodations for every man's taste and pocket book.

The most exciting hoped-for arrival on the heavenly horizon is a March visit from Jackie and Aristotle Onassis. In their heavenly yacht, of course.

Director Richard Brooks has been on the island to set up April production of The Happy Ending to star his wife Jean Simmons, Gena "Face" Rowlands, Lloyd Bridges, John Forsythe, Tina Louise and Bobby Darin. The latter is interesting in view of his courtship of Mrs. Hartford during the time she was separated from Huntington. Are she and Bobby still speaking? We'll know in April.

How did Brooks pick Paradise Island for his film? He met Sidney Poitier in Rome and Sidney was raving about this little bit of England in the Bahamas. Richard wired wife Jean to join him there and he promptly switched from shooting the film in Hawaii.

Lady Victor Sassoon, who winters every year in Nassau, was smoking a cheroot after lunch at the hotel, and making plans for the Sir Victor Sassoon Heart Foundation Ball. Joan Crawford was to have been the guest of honor, but she must attend a meeting for her soft drink company in St. Louis, at the time the ball will be taking place. "Ah well, we do have Meyer Davis and his orchestra," said Lady Sassoon.

Eve Arden and her husband were recent visitors, as were Ralph Bellamy and the Jack O'Briens. And I just missed Jack Palance, who was staying at the Ocean Club. Also Orson Welles, who was a sight for the locals, wandering all over the place in a Chinese mandarin outfit. Who does he think he is — Mao Tse Tung?

Druids Are Scarce

After a column of mine about Jesus appeared in the paper around Christmas, a woman called and asked me what religion I professed. I told her I was a Reform Evangelical Druid. She didn't seem to know what that was.

We Druids — small in number, but ardent in faith — have a most peculiar theology, but it seems to work for us. Most of the time.

We don't think it's important if you "believe" in God — as long as God believes in you.

And there is only one way to make Him believe in you to be as selfish as possible at all times. This means to want whatever is best for you, and you alone, in every situation.

If you are truly, deeply, unremotely and wholly selfish, you are saved. We don't know what you are saved for, but that is none of our business. That is God's business, and we don't interfere in it.

Now, the art of being selfish seems to most people to be the easiest thing in the world, but that delusion is just a trap of Satan. Pure unadulterated selfishness is about the hardest thing in the world to accomplish, and it often takes a lifetime of unceasing effort.

In order to be genuinely selfish, you have to want what is best for the self, and to do what is best for the self. This implies knowing what is best for the self — and this is what make Druidism so hard.

To be a Druid in good standing (even a non-Reform or Evangelical one), you first of all have to understand the nature of nibla. You have to know that he was designed for something, just as an acorn is designed to be an oak tree.

If you properly understand the nature of man, even in part, then you know that the basic need, and the basic aim, of your true self is to become as human as it is possible to be. The only way your self can ever be satisfied is by turning its potentiality for humanhood into act.

Next, you have to understand what it means to become as human as possible: how the reason and the will and the appetites work together, how man can live and control his humanhood without falling into the error of angelism on the one hand or bestiality on the other.

When you have mastered this knowledge — which involves retraining the emotions as much as the mind — then you are ready to become the most selfish person in the world, doing only those things which are of benefit to your true self. This is why we are such a small sect.

Ice-Boat Makes Voyage

NANAIMO — It took two years, but a boat built by Ed Robinek of Nanaimo has been launched.

The problem was the boat needed a long, hard winter. Mr. Robinek, a local ship-builder, built his ice-boat and then had to wait for Vancouver Island to have sufficiently cold temperatures for him to try it out.

It happened this winter when Long Lake, about two miles north of Nanaimo froze and he was able to take his vessel on its maiden voyage.

He was so thrilled by the experience that he has taken it out every day the wind has been strong enough. Even blizzards can't stop him.

Mr. Robinek says the vessel is a skeeter type. It is about 20 feet long with an 18-foot mast and 75 feet of sail.

It is designed to reach 70 to 80 miles an hour. Helping Mr. Robinek is Stan Volmers who was the winner of the 1968 bathtub race. "Ice-boating is even more exciting than bathtubting," said Mr. Volmers.

The boat cost about $1,000 to build and next year Mr. Robinek plans to go into the B.C. Interior with it.

"I don't know when I'll ever use it again on Vancouver Island," he said.

Mr. Robinek built his first ice-boat on Lake Winnipeg in 1930.

The ice on Long Lake is strong enough to allow races between Mr. Robinek's car and the ice-boat piloted by Mr. Volmers — the car often wins.

Mr. Robinek may have scored a "first" for the Island.

Mayor Frank Ney of Nanaimo says he has never heard of ice-boating on Vancouver Island. However he feels it is a "dubious honor for Canada's evergreen playground."

Hovercraft Date Arranged

NANAIMO — After several postponements in starting the Vancouver-Nanaimo hovercraft service, officials of Pacific Hovercraft have announced that runs will begin Feb. 22.

There will be two daily trips. The hovercraft will leave Vancouver Harbor, at the foot of Granville Street, at 8 a.m. and 2:50 p.m. It will leave from its terminal behind the Malaspina Hotel, Nanaimo, at 9:10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Fares will be $7 for adults and $4 for children.

Officials said they hope to start an hourly service, after the runs have been operating for several weeks, and start a Victoria service later.

Wrestlers Win Titles

NEW WESTMINSTER — Taras Hryb, 16-year-old Oak Bay High School student, won the 178-pound class title and 17-year-old Terry Lefebvre of CFB Esquimalt took the 123-pound division title in the British Columbia Junior Wrestling Championships Saturday.

Another Oak Bay High student, Dave Dennison, 17, finished second in the 148-pound division and S. J. Willis Junior High's Jagjet Olanwa, also 17, was second in the 106-pound class. University of Victoria student Cliff Morton, 18, came fourth in the 157-pound division.

A total of 13 Victoria wrestlers, mostly from Oak Bay High School and YMCA, competed in the weekend events.

Active Year Forecast

DUNCAN — An active year has been forecast for Vancouver Island wildlife group by Arnie Williams, a Duncan businessman, who was recently re-elected president for a second term.

Two years is the longest a president can remain in office.

"Last year was one of the most challenging years in our existence," said Mr. Williams. "And I can foresee one just as bad — or worse."

The group consists of 15 local clubs who have joined into one unit.

"Vancouver Island Wildlife is an asset to the sportsman and is the largest, most ambitious and strongest group in B.C. We make recommendations to the sportsmen and try to improve hunting conditions for them. Many resolutions to both the federal and provincial governments go through us."

"We work against pollution, open-pit mining and many other problems. It is a continuous job and we are always jumping from one problem to another. We try to improve the climate for the conservation office by trying to work with the fish and wildlife branch — not against it."

Mr. Williams would like to see weekend access for hunters in such areas as public logging districts instead of day by day access.

"One problem is that many people are already taking the privilege and my contention is that the principle people should be given the courtesy because I feel they would obey the rules that are on the passes," he said.

"A good percentage of the people do not right now."

Vancouver Island Shooting League was formed within the wildlife organization and has made a name for itself in competitive shooting.

Sleeves Rolled for Bilingualism

Canada, Not Trudeau, 'on Line'

● Peace try by Stanfield falls short. Page 2.

● Several new stars at federal-provincial conference. Page 9.

From Wire Reports

OTTAWA — Rolled-up shirtsleeves under a Bond Street suit jacket? Stylish-dresser Pierre Elliott Trudeau?

Provincial premiers can't be blamed for looking closely at the cuffs of the Prime Minister's jacket Monday morning when they sit down for the opening session of the constitutional conference here. If no shirt cuffs are showing, there could be fireworks.

Trudeau told reporters Saturday that he was prepared to roll up his sleeves and fight for a bilingual Canada. But, he added, he was not going to "fight the premiers with my sleeves rolled up."

The reporters came pounding on the door of his official residence asking for elaboration of a

Toronto newspaper interview in which he said he would quit his job and leave the country if it wasn't prepared to accept his concept of bilingualism.

Trudeau said that he had no intention of quitting. He explained that his job wasn't on the line, but a concept of a Canada free from language ghettos, with bilingualism spread across the country.

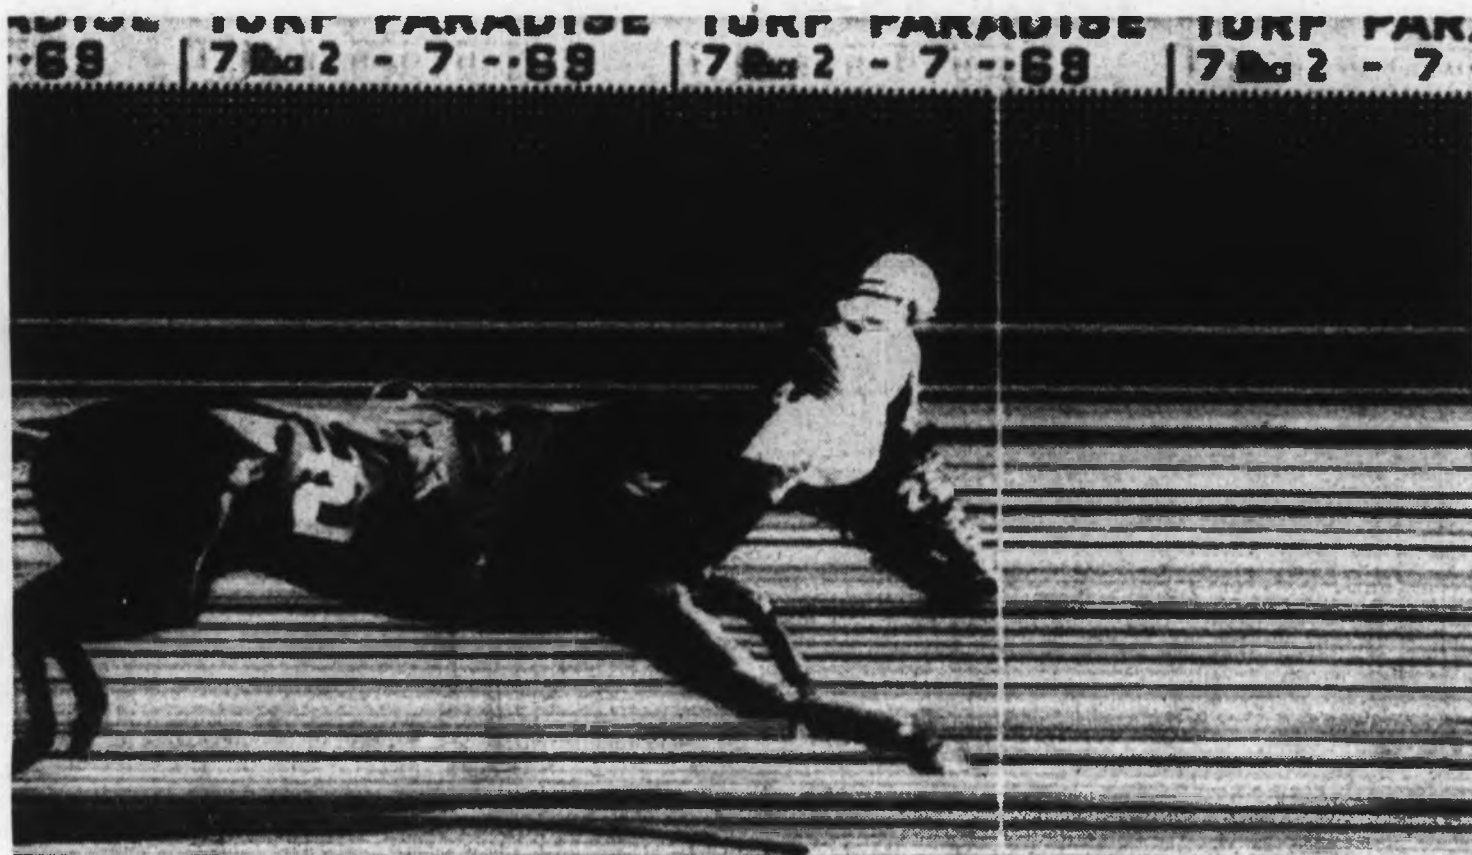

"This is on the line," he said, "and if this kind of country doesn't work, Canada will wither away and I just won't have a job."

Trudeau said he didn't intend to resign just because one, two or even five premiers don't agree with what he is doing.

"I am used to working in the opposition," he said. "And I believe in this concept for Canada. I will fight for it long and hard."

At another point in his chat, Trudeau said he doesn't quit easily and those who want him to, should slow down. He would see his four-year mandate through to the end.

Soviets Condemned

Italian Reds Back Czechs

BOLOGNA, Italy (AP)—Luigi Longo, secretary-general of the largest Communist party in the western world, told a wildly applauding audience of nearly 5,000 comrades Saturday that his party condemns Soviet actions in Czechoslovakia.

In a major speech opening the 12th national congress of the Italian party, Longo also rejected Soviet attempts to blame "imperialistic" actions of the West for the plight of Czechoslovakia.

'PRECIOUS PROPERTY'

The veteran 68-year-old Red leader aligned his party with Czechoslovak leaders and declared: "Their authority is a precious property for the Czech people."

Longo's praise of the Czechoslovak liberalization program and denunciation of the Soviet bloc invasion to halt it brought loud applause from most of the 1,000 Italian delegates and 4,000 observers including a delegation from Prague, as they sat beneath a red hammer and sickle flag.

GRIM SILENCE

But the three-man delegation from Moscow and representatives of other eastern bloc countries sat in grim silence.

The Red leader rapped pro-Peking and anarchist agitators in Italy and promised that his party would seek access to power through legal "constitutional" methods.

Longo declared, however, that Italy's Communist party, with its 8,500,000 voters making it the second largest in the country, would resort to violence if any rightists attempt a coup or if Italy's membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization should lead the nation into a war "against its will."

MORE CRITICISM

Meanwhile, in Bucharest, Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu has publicly denounced the principle of "limited sovereignty" laid down by Soviet Communist leader Leonid Brezhnev to justify the invasion of Czechoslovakia, it was disclosed Saturday.

Ceausescu, addressing a national conference of teachers Friday night, said "limited sovereignty" is unMarxist and an attempt to justify past mistakes.

FILIPINO FERRY SINKS

MANILA, Philippines (AP)—Delayed reports from the southern Philippines said today that an inter-island ferry with possibly more than 100 passengers capsized near Zamboanga.

Eleven bodies were recovered and 62 passengers reported safe.

The boat, the Cotabato III, was said to have capsized Thursday night. Search parties were still looking for the missing.

"I just find it washes whiter, that's all."

Jerusalem Law Hit

From Wire Reports

Jordan asked Saturday for an urgent UN Security Council meeting on the ground that a pending Israeli law would violate Arab rights in annexed old Jerusalem and hamper the quest for peace in the Middle East.

Sources in Amman said the law would provide that no company, society or professional person could function in Jerusalem without an Israeli licence. No council meeting was expected before Monday.

***

Press reports from Egypt and Syria said Iraq has placed another group of defendants on trial for spying for Israel and the CIA. It was reported no Jews were among the accused.

Egypt said Saturday it is holding about 200 Jewish men who refuse to serve in the Egyptian army, but said they were welcome to leave Egypt at any time.

In Cairo, a government spokesman officially welcomed President Nixon's promise that the United States in the future will take new peace initiatives in the Middle East crisis.

Lindy of Kites Makes It

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP)—Columbus millionaire Ben Blinn was a happy man Saturday — but not because of his wealth.

It's because the 70-year-old outdoor advertising sign executive believes he has reached the pinnacle of another career — kite flying.

He said he received confirmation Friday that a plastic bottle attached to a kite he and a partner put in the air at Nantucket Island in June of 1967, has been found Jan. 31 at Fistrall Beach, Newquay, Cornwall, on the south coast of England.

He and Walter Scott, 71, a wealthy, retired candymaker, had launched 18 kites, each 4 or 5 feet tall, with a 2,000-foot string, from Nantucket.

They had studied tides and currents between Nantucket and Southampton and to each kite was attached a plastic bottle containing Blinn's address and a message asking that he be notified where it was found.

Also in the bottle was half of a $1 bill. Blinn said that he received a letter Friday from John C. Orel of Cornwall reporting finding the bottle, and listing the serial number: on the half bill. They match the half Blinn holds, the latter said.

***

Blinn recalled Saturday his kite-flying hobby relates to his youth when he said he was "desperately poor" and had promised himself that "if I ever get rich I'm going to have plenty of kites and a fountain."

He added the fountain, he said because then only rich men in town had one.

"Now I've got two," he said

Saturday. He said he and Scott are making plans to go to England and collect the evidence.

Weather Permitting

Boeing's Behemoth to Fly Today

EVERETT, Wash. (AP)—Should the weatherman smile, and all other factors be "go," a historic flight will start at Paine Field today.

About 2½ hours later, after a cruise of the Puget Sound area and perhaps a brief probe over the Cascades to the east, depending again on the weather, test pilot Jack Waddell will bring the world's largest commercial airliner back to the plant where it was put together.

The event will be the maiden flight of the Boeing 747, a superjet which can carry 490 passengers, three times the number who can ride in airliners in use now, at a cruising speed of 625 miles an hour.

In a way, the first flight of the $20,000,000 jumbo jet marks, an anniversary.

Just a little more than 10 years ago, the commercial jet age came in on the wings of a Boeing 707 when it carried 111 passengers from New York to Paris on a scheduled flight.

Waddell put the gigantic 747 through its paces on the ground the past week. He steered it in series of "S" turns and finally pushed the throttles of the four huge engines forward enough so the 355-ton plane was rolling 160 miles an hour, not much under takeoff speed.

Some time ago he said the colossus, which can fly non-stop 6,000 miles, would "fly like an angel" and be safe "as a church." After the taxi tests, Waddell was as pleased as before. "She handles beautifully," he said.

"We're ready, and the plane's ready."

North Island Rinks Sweep Mixed Curling

COURTENAY—North Island rinks scored a sweep Saturday, winning all four Vancouver Island spots in the Pacific Coast Curling Association mixed final, in the eight-rink, double-knock-out zone playoff against four south island winners at the Comox Valley Curling Club.

South Island rinks, three from Esquimalt and one from the Victoria Curling Club, failed to win any of the five games they played against the well-balanced north island finalists.

First to reach the PCAA playoff were Vern Thompson (Bunny Anderson, Ken and Dianne White) of Nanaimo and Chuck Perry (Mary Davies, Bob Carscadden and Olie Acorn) of the Comox Valley club.

MOVES TO FINAL

Thompson defeated Ted Calbeck of Victoria, 10-8, on the first draw, then won his berth by reaching the final of "A" event with an 8-7 decision over clubmate Harry Whitman.

Perry started with an 11-6 win over Bill Fussey of Esquimalt and finished off with a 14-4 rout of Pat Marshall of Esquimalt.

Whitman reached the "A" semi with an 8-6 win over Jim Marasco of Port Alberni, Marshall with an 8-7, extra-end win over Gordon Hoey of Esquimalt.

Marasco (Eleanor Gulstene, Ken and Oliver Coomber) then defeated Calbeck, 9-4, in the quarter-finals of "B" event and won his spot by defeating Hoey, 11-5. Hoey won the other "B" quarterfinal, 8-4, from Fussey.

Whitman (Jessie Whitman, Frank Jedrejczyk, Faye Dorman) qualified for the PCAA playoff with a 10-4 win over Marshall.

PLAY NEXT WEEKEND

The Island survivors, four because the Island zone is hosting the PCAA final, will play against two winners from each of the Lower Mainland and Fraser Valley zones at the Campbell River Curling Club next weekend.

Winner of the PCAA playoff will stay in Campbell River for a best-of-three provincial final against the B.C. Curling Association champion, the winner to represent B.C. in the Canadian final.

Nanaimo Basketball Player Caught in System Shuffle

By KEVAN HULL

When the Vancouver Island high school boys' basketball championships are played at the University of Victoria gymnasium March 7-8, Ian Thompson of Nanaimo High School will not be participating if the Hubsters make it to the Island final.

Ian, 18, has been caught in the shuffle of a new system and as there are no rules currently covering his situation, has been ruled ineligible by the B.C. High School Boys' Basketball Association.

Thompson is a good prep player and it is a shame that he will not be able to play. It is difficult for his parents, Ray and Jane Plater, to understand why he can't play. And it is just as impossible for the association to allow him to play.

The problem arises from the entry of the Nanaimo school district into a two-year experimental tryout of a semester system, in which a student doesn't have to attend for a full year.

The student, if he attends two semesters — the first from September to the middle of January and the second to the completion of the regular school year — will be able to take at least one more course than in the regular setup.

ON SEMESTER PROGRAM

Thompson, eligible through age for another basketball season, needed only two courses to complete his graduation program. He decided to work in the Interior for the first semester, and is currently taking four subjects.

His twin brother, Allan, who is also on the team, is on a different program and is attending both semesters.

But Ian is fulfilling the requirements of his school district to the full.

However, this is a unique situation for the association, which has earned a great deal of respect for its handling of the provincial school play-downs and annual tournament.

SEVERAL PROBLEMS

The association has had to deal with several problems in its growth — stopping the prating of boys from one school to another in the same district, lack of academic standing, etc.

"Our belief is that a boy goes to school to get an education, not to play basketball," said association president Jack Gilbert of Port Alberni. "The only reason we've got where we are is that we've played by the book."

The "book" lists several deadlines for the signing and transferring of players and it is on these deadlines that the association had to rule Thompson ineligible.

TOLD COACH

"I was aware that this situation was arising," said Gilbert. "I told the coach (R. Debuyscher) in October, before any of the deadlines had been reached, to put the problem down in writing to the board of governors."

"This was not done until well into January and all the deadlines had passed."

"I feel the board of governors gave the case a fair hearing. Both the request and appeal were turned down."

MUST LIVE BY RULES

An organization must live by its rules, but it is hard for the parents and the boy. In a letter to the association secretary, Chas. McLachlan of Vancouver, Mrs. Plater wrote:

"I do not know your reasons for making your decision. I believe attendance is the only basis you have for not allowing second semester students to play. Using this basis, how do you justify eligibility of those who 'attend' solely for the purpose of playing basketball and drop out immediately after the end of a glorious season? It seems to me that any student who satisfies the requirements of a school for attendance should also satisfy yours in this regard."

Smale Keeps Title In Interior Curling

KIMBERLEY — Kevin Smale of Prince George retained his B.C. Curling Association championship on Saturday to gain a second straight chance at the men's provincial championship.

Smale made it by defeating Eric Bisgrove of Kimberley, 8-6, in the deciding game of the double-knockout playoff which involved seven zone winners and eight rinks which qualified out of the annual BCCA bonspiel.

It was the 11th win in 12 playoff games for Smale, whose only loss was the 14-6 clobbering he took from Bisgrove in the "A" event semifinals.

The break against Bisgrove came on the 10th end when vice-skip Pete Sherba successfully executed a raise and roll to leave the Prince George rink with two counters.

After an exchange of takeouts had left the Prince George rink with one counter, Smale made his free draw for two to take a 7-5 lead. The rinks exchanged single counters on the last two ends.

Bisgrove earned his berth in the final by defeating Roy Vinthers of Kamloops, 8-7, in the "A" final. Vinthers had an early lead, started home one up but lost when Bisgrove needed only to make a free draw with his last rock to get the winning point.

Smale won the "B" final by defeating Don Scherk of Prince Rupert, 6-5, when Scherk was three inches away with a draw for the tying point.

Smale now plays Ted Harris of Ladner, the Pacific Coast Curling Association champion, in a best-of-three series starting here today for the right to represent B.C. in the Canadian final, in Oshawa starting March 3.

Joining Lions

VANCOUVER (CP) — Donny Moore, 205-pound running back at University of Washington before spending the last two years in the U.S. Army, will play for British Columbia Lions of the Western Football Conference this season.

Lesser Teams, Weather In Soccer Fore

LONDON (CP) — While snow and ice kept the English League First Division giants and Football Association Cup favorites in cold storage, the lesser clubs monopolized the interest in the British soccer program Saturday.

All eight fifth-round English FA Cup ties were postponed — the first time a complete round was wiped out by the weather — and only four of the 30 English League games were played.

CARDIFF TOPS OXFORD

In the four played as scheduled Cardiff City took the honors with a 5-0 victory over Oxford United to jump into second place in the Second Division, four points behind Derby, Cardiff got two goals each from Brian Clark and John Toshack and one by Ronnie Bird.

The loss left Oxford rooted even more firmly at the bottom of the standings and it looks almost certain to return to the Third Division if it moved up from last season.

In the only other Second Division game Portsmouth edged Hull City 1-0, Ray Hiron getting the goal 10 minutes from full time.

WATFORD WINS EASILY

Watford increased its lead in the Third Division to two points with a convincing 5-1 victory over Rotherham United. In the other game, third-placed Bournemouth dropped a valuable two points in a surprising 2-0 defeat against Luton Town.

Scotland was more fortunate with the weather. Four second-round Scottish FA Cup games and seven Scottish League games were played.

With two of the Cup games resulting in draws, Dundee United and Morton were the only clubs to go through to the third round. Dundee United centre-forward

Campaign Keeps Spotlight

NANAIMO — The Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands by-election campaign seems to have been the only activity in town. Almost nothing happened in Nanaimo during the last week to take precedence over election news.

***
The campaign, has been between three candidates — NDP leader T. C. Douglas, Liberal Eric Winch and Conservative Dr. Magnus Verbrugge.

Locally, at least, it seems that the by-election created deeper partisan feelings than the general election did last summer.

A conditioned reflex seems to have been set up in each of the candidates over the word "coffee".

By the time the campaign ended, the candidates wanted to avoid the subject as much as possible after attending many coffee parties.

The trio attended seven all-candidate meetings and several all-candidate broadcasts so they were able to get to know each other quite well.

As one joked this week, he had seen his opponents more times than he had seen his wife.

Both Mr. Winch and Dr. Verbrugge agreed that they were inexperienced politicians when the campaign started. However, by the end, they had gained considerable confidence.

***
Although Mr. Douglas had many years of politics behind him, he had to scale down his efforts to suit meetings which were smaller than he had been used to on a national level.

In each of the party headquarters, behind-the-scenes workers put in as many hours as the candidates — not more.

A number of Nanaimo residents frequently commented on the candidates' sincerity and ability.

Mr. Douglas had decades of political service to both his home province of Saskatchewan and Canada behind him and was never accused of self-interest by his opponents.

Mr. Winch considered the Liberal nomination for more than a month before resigning his position as district magistrate and committing his 20 years of local knowledge to the party.

Dr. Verbrugge started his plans to enter politics about six years ago. He allowed his name to stand at the December Conservative nomination meeting and was unopposed.

Although each attacked the others' politics, there were no personality attacks in the campaign.

President Re-Elected

Active Year Forecast For Wildlife Group

DUNCAN — An active year has been forecast for Vancouver Island wildlife group by Arnie Williams, a Duncan businessman, who was recently re-elected president for a second term.

Two years is the longest a president can remain in office. "Last year was one of the most challenging years in our existence," said Mr. Williams. "And I can foresee one just as bad — or worse."

The group consists of 15 local clubs who have joined into one unit.

SOLUTION SOUGHT

"The purpose is that if a local club has a problem or a grievance, but is unable to attain a solution, it then goes to the Vancouver Island Wildlife, with a membership of approximately 4,000, to try to accomplish the same thing," said Mr. Williams.

"If they cannot settle the problem then it would go to the B.C. Wildlife Federation, a unit of organizations the same as Vancouver Island Wildlife. It has a membership of approximately 20,000. It gives weight so the government will sit up and take notice. If this fails then it goes to the Canada Wildlife Group."

"The sights of the club are set considerably higher now than 20 years ago," said Mr.

Williams. "We know more of what we are doing. "Vancouver Island Wildlife is an asset to the sportsman and is the largest, most ambitious and strongest group in B.C. We make recommendations to the sportsmen and try to improve hunting conditions for them. Many resolutions to both the federal and provincial governments go through us."

"We work against pollution, open-pit mining and many other problems. It is a continuous job and we are always jumping from one problem to another. We try to improve the climate for the conservation office by trying to work with the fish and wildlife branch — not against it."

Mr. Williams would like to see weekend access for hunters in such areas as public logging districts instead of day by day access.

"One problem is that many people are already taking the privilege and my contention is that the principle people should be given the courtesy because I feel they would obey the rules that are on the passes," he said. "A good percentage of the people do not right now."

SHOOTING LEAGUE
Vancouver Island Shooting League was formed within the wildlife organization and has made a name for itself in competitive shooting.

"It fills a need for sportsmen who like to shoot actively but not necessarily hunt," said Mr. Williams.

"Many of the local clubs sponsor schools and competitions which are very successful and people travel from all over to participate."

Port Alberni

Soggy Roads Set Problem

PORT ALBERNI — Mixed rain and snow, measuring close to three inches in water content in the city, and as much as 17 inches of snow, followed by two inches of rain in rural areas, has turned many Port Alberni roads into soggy bogs for unwary motorists.

***
Main roads are good but the Tofino Highway has been closed. It will remain closed indefinitely because of snowslides in the mountains, highways officials said Saturday.

Thirteen-year-old Gail Gus escaped with a badly bruised ankle when a snowbank, on which she was standing, gave way and she slipped under a bus on Friday.

***
Redford Street weather station in downtown Port Alberni reported 2.69 inches of rain up to 8 a.m. Saturday. At McCoy Lake, 2.98 inches of rain combined with 17.1 inches of snow for a total of 4.69 inches of precipitation in the 24-hour period. The snowfall brought the winter total at McCoy Lake to a record 206.3 inches so far this winter.

There was more snow in Gold River Friday. Chains were recommended on the Gold River to Campbell River road and the Port Hardy road is being closed periodically because of snow slides.

Nanaimo Voyage

Ice-Boat Scores 'First'

NANAIMO — It took two years, but a boat built by Ed Robinek of Nanaimo has been launched.

The problem was the boat needed a long, hard winter. Mr. Robinek, a local ship-builder, built his ice-boat and then had to wait for Vancouver Island to have sufficiently cold temperatures for him to try it out.

It happened this winter when Long Lake, about two miles north of Nanaimo froze and he was able to take his vessel on its maiden voyage.

***
He was so thrilled by the experience that he has taken it out every day the wind has been strong enough. Even blizzards can't stop him.

Mr. Robinek says the vessel is a skeeter type. It is about 20 feet long with an 18-foot mast and 75 feet of sail.

It is designed to reach 70 to 80 miles an hour. Helping Mr. Robinek is Stan Volmers who was the winner of the 1968 bathtub race. "Ice-boating is even more exciting than bathtubting," said Mr. Volmers.

The boat cost about $1,000 to build and next year Mr. Robinek plans to go into the B.C. Interior with it.

"I don't know when I'll ever use it again on Vancouver Island," he said. Mr. Robinek built his first ice-boat on Lake Winnipeg in 1930. The ice on Long Lake is strong enough to allow races between Mr. Robinek's car and the ice-boat piloted by Mr. Volmers — the car often wins. Mr. Robinek may have scored a "first" for the Island.

Mayor Frank Ney of Nanaimo says he has never heard of ice-boating on Vancouver Island. However he feels it is a "dubious honor for Canada's evergreen playground."

Forest Crews Stick To Decision

PORT ALBERNI — Wood crews stuck to their decision Saturday not to work a six-day week.

Consequently there was no production in the Sproat Lake, Cameron or Franklin River divisions of MacMillan Bloedel.

Company officials decline to comment on the situation which arose when MacMillan Bloedel applied for a permit from the Industrial Relations Board allowing crews the longer week over a three month period.

***
The company contends that extra hours are needed because production was curtailed during recent severe weather, causing a log shortage.

A three-week interim permit for Saturday work has been obtained while the company application is considered.

"No alterations arose between workers and the company. The loggers simply stood by their 40-hour work week agreement and none of them showed up Saturday," said a union member.

***
At a regular IWA local meeting Saturday morning, a report on the loggers' decision was given to the members. The local approved its executive's decision to protest the application for a longer working week.

"We fought for a 40-hour week in the 1940's and we're not going back to the bad old days," said a member.

Cowichan School District

Pupil Resource Centre Has Room to Grow

DUNCAN — Big expansion is anticipated this year for Cowichan school district's resource centre which moved into new quarters at the beginning of this year.

Its new home is in the primary annex at Duncan elementary school.

"We want to make a giant stride," said William Nutt, district librarian. "We felt a bit behind because in the old quarters there was no room for expansion."

***
The centre has $30,000 worth of readers, film strips and other teaching materials plus another $4,000 worth of equipment and supplies. It was established five years ago.

Mr. Nutt said that so far his centre is mainly elementary school-oriented, but with bigger accommodations, more material and services will be offered to junior and senior high schools in the district.

He said that until the resource centre was established, every school bought its set of readers which created a duplication and "actually this centre is a saving in funds."

The schools still have their individual libraries, but the centre is not only able to supplement the book supply but can offer a wide variety of teaching aid material.

***
It includes a film strip library with 1,000 different subjects; a record and tape collection; science and social studies kits; film loops; supplementary readers and novels; a professional library for teachers, and a pool library which is rotated amongst the smaller schools.

Planned for this year and 1970, is the establishment of a regional 16 mm film library for Cowichan, Ladysmith and Lake Cowichan school districts, a picture file and film slides.

When they order books, the centre staff relies largely on library journals.

"We are fortunate that the American and Canadian library associations publish excellent book selections and now they are even moving into the evaluation of audio-visual material," said Mr. Nutt.

Elementary books are centrally ordered, processed and catalogued. Teachers can order a large variety of books and materials related to topics which are being taught through the centre.

It also caters for newer types and audio-visual aids available to schools and materials from books and magazines can be reproduced.

***
In the planning stage is the production of transparencies overhead projectors, establishment of sound production facilities, production of 8 mm film loops and slide copying.

Mr. Nutt, a schoolteacher for 12 years, began to specialize as a librarian 10 years ago.

"I find library work more satisfying," he said.

Woman Named

QUALICUM BEACH — Police Saturday identified a woman killed Friday in a head-on car crash four miles north of Qualicum Beach as Mrs. Ruth Neilson of Anacortes, Wash.

Mrs. Neilson's husband, William, was in hospital at nearby Nanaimo with head cuts and other injuries and reported to be in fair condition.

The lone occupant of the second car escaped serious injury.

Union Bay Quiet

Balto Loses Battle Cry In Contest with Train

By JOHN MOORE

UNION BAY — Things have been quiet in Union Bay.

The reason is that Balto recently went down with laryngitis.

Balto is a six-year-old Labrador with a chest like a barrel and a stentorian voice which can be heard for blocks.

Balto's voice has been his pride. For five years, he has fought a long and hard contest with the E and N passenger train and has been on top all the way.

***
Each day the train roars through a rock-cut 100 yards back in the woods and each day at the same time the engineer lets loose a series of long-drawn out blasts on the whistle as a signal for a level-crossing up ahead.

Balto is ready and waiting. As the whistle starts, his hackles rise, his head goes up and he lets out a series of banhee-like howls.

Balto puts his heart into the job and the howling continues until the engine is silenced. Then Balto closes off with a series of high-pitched yelps to mark his victory.

Then tragedy struck. Balto reached for a higher note than he could handle. The sound that emerged from his throat was a croaking caricature of what it used to be.

Balto's victory cry is gone and the engine now whistles through the rock cut with no one to oppose it. Balto's pride is in the dust.

Hearings Finished

PORT ALBERNI — The last of 171 appeals was heard Thursday at Port Alberni court of revision which began last week.

City assessor Joe Ruissen said the results may be out by Tuesday.

In addition to general assessment appeals, George McKnight of Port Alberni claimed that fixed MacMillan and Bloedel assessments were too low and put the tax burden from industry onto residents.

Children's Art Featured In Slide Show

PORT ALBERNI — Slides of art work by Indian children, currently on display at Victoria's provincial museum, will be seen in Port Alberni next week.

Robert Aller, a local artist who has gained wide recognition of his work with Indian children, will present the show Thursday evening in Port Alberni Friendship Centre.

Mr. Aller's work of making a collection of drawings, based on Indian masks and totem poles, was interrupted early in the fall by a three-month period in autumn.

However he plans to return to his work schedule shortly and will return to Victoria next weekend.

Later he will go to Vancouver and Winnipeg. He has a five-week engagement at the University of Manitoba where he will show work by Indian pupils and discuss his method of working with children.

He is also due to spend three weeks at Ontario Institute for Studies in Education later this year.

During the summer, Mr. Aller plans to live on a reserve to help Indian artists and craftsmen. He says he also expects to learn from them.

The invitation came from Indians.

Last summer he spent two to three weeks in five different Indian communities.

Snow Beauty

ERRINGTON — Vancouver Island residents, swamped by unusually heavy snowfalls this winter have had some consolation. The snow, which has meant long hours of shovelling for many, has produced some attractive sights. Picture by Dorothy Butler of Errington shows that tree stumps and other undistinguished objects take on an attractive aspect as they are transformed into natural "snow sculptures".

Nanaimo

Circle Pays Tribute To Former Mayor

NANAIMO — More than 300 people paid silent tribute Saturday night to former Nanaimo mayor Pete Maffeo who died last spring. They were members and guests of the Italian-Canadian Circle which held its annual banquet at the Mount Benson Legion.

PORT ALBERNI — Alberni district secondary school will present The Wonderful Adventures of Don Quixote Wednesday and Thursday.

The play is directed by Stan Graves who supervised previous successful productions at the school such as The Mouse that Roared and Arsenic and Old Lace.

Main roles will be portrayed by George Hodge, Rick Patterson, Judi MacMillan, Marie Zaffaroni, Roy Duke, Bob Pratt.

A teacher, H. J. Roelants is stage manager and has helped to create costumes for the presentation.

Mrs. Patricia Elvis and Mrs. I. R. Harrison of the home economics department are in charge of costume design and make-up.

Engines Fail In Gale

TOFINO — A 25-foot troller from Ahousat, the Lennie Bee, survived the fierce winds which struck parts of north Vancouver Island Friday despite an engine breakdown.

Engine trouble started near Monks Island, about seven miles from Tofino. There were four adults and two babies aboard.

and their baby and Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Tom and their baby were taken to Ahousat by rescue boats Saturday morning after Mr. Tom managed to reach Fitzpatrick Island and walked to Ahousat.

No one was injured.

Guilty Plea Entered

NANAIMO — August Delynn Dayley, 23, pleaded guilty Friday in magistrate's court to breaking into a Nanaimo restaurant and stealing liquor worth $600.

Police searched Dayley's home and found about 35 bottles of liquor. He was remanded to next Friday for sentencing.

Jacqueline Niessen, 22, was remanded without plea to Monday on a charge of possessing stolen liquor.

VICTORIA, B.C., SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1969

Cold winter days bring excellent chinook salmon fishing for Finlayson Arm guide Gordy Lamont. —Alec Merriman photo.

By T. W. PATERSON

Today few of the brave pioneers are remembered. A glance at issues of The Colonist over the past century, to give but one source, discloses name after name which should be immortalized in bronze and stone. Sadly, many of these unsung heroes and heroines, even then, were anonymous. Only their courageous deeds speak for them; alas, only to the serious researcher.

Who Remembers?

The name Minnie Paterson will not be unfamiliar to most. Yet who recognizes that of another "Grace Darling," Victoria's own Mrs. E. A. Turnbull, nee Elizabeth Annie Sea, who died last year at 97? Unable to swim a stroke, the tiny heroine singlehandedly rowed into the teeth of a raging storm to rescue two men from their capsized sailboat. A year before she had rescued a yachting party in similar circumstances. She received a citation from the Royal Canadian Humane Society. But, today, who remembers?

Or courageous Mabel Shirr whose stalwart smile kept the schooner Hera's crew from fatal panic when their ancient command caught fire in Vancouver Island's Graveyard. Or the nameless brave who saved the Puritan's crew with only a fishline and raw courage?

Clo-oose Indian Jacob Chipps made headlines 62 years ago with an account of heroism and physical endurance which must be unparalleled to this day.

In July, 1907, Chipps, his 18-year-old daughter Ida, her infant, 18 months, and three companions were off Point Grey, enroute to the Fraser River fishing grounds. A heavy swell rocked the Strait of Georgia that afternoon, and their little boat heaved drunkenly.

Chipps was in the stern, steering, when the baby began crying. Turning slightly to see what was the matter, he released his grip on the tiller. Sadly, his careless move came at the precise moment a mountainous wave streaked down on their tiny craft. Before he could regain control, the boat was swept onto its side, pitching all six occupants into the frigid sea.

Chipps and the three passengers managed to cling to the upturned boat's keel, but his daughter, baby still clutched tightly to her breast, was carried beyond reach. Upon seeing her danger, Chipps frantically stripped off his clothes and boots, including his moneybelt containing $700 dollars, and swam to his daughter's side.

Grabbing her with one arm, the baby in the other, Chipps, "a magnificent specimen of manhood, strong, powerful and skilful," began swimming back to the boat. But that craft, with its helpless passengers, was hurled away by the wind, leaving the frightened grandfather with his unconscious charges miles from shore, facing certain death.

Jacob Chipps could not remember what happened after that. He knew only that he had struggled ashore — somehow — at midnight. His companions estimated they had capsized at 5 p.m. Meaning Chipps had been in the water seven hours!

Rescuers who found the exhausted brave, seemingly lying lifeless on the beach, marvelled at the nightmare he had endured. Like readers today, they could only imagine what he had been through. Somehow, daughter and grandchild wrapped in his arms, he had dog-paddled the several miles to shore. How many hours he swam, virtually unconscious, is beyond knowing.

COURAGEOUS DEEDS SPEAK FOR ANONYMOUS HEROES

Blindly he had struggled onward, ever onward, driven by a superhuman compulsion to save his family.

When revived, the valiant brave had asked of his daughter and baby, to be told they were beyond help, dead of exposure. Probably within a half hour of the accident, they said.

Days later, the Princess Victoria brought a solemn Chipps and the bodies of Ida and baby to Victoria for burial. The grieving brave vowed he would never live again at Clo-oose, "where there are so many things to remind him of his lost ones."

The following month, Chipps was awarded the Royal Humane Society Medal for his remarkable feat.

"Albert Crane went to his death after making it possible for Jim and me to save ourselves. No finer fellow ever lived than he," swore a grateful Capt. Martin Dyke, 12 years later.

"No more heartrending and thrilling tale of the sea was ever unfolded . . ." reported The Colonist of the fishing schooner Dyke's ill-fated voyage of May, 1919. Aboard were Capt. Dyke, Jim Parsons and Albert Crane.

Off treacherous Triangle Island, at the northern end of Vancouver Island, little Dyke had been caught in a savage gale. Hurricane-force winds battered the auxiliary schooner unmercifully, time and time again almost driving her beneath the towering waves. At her helm stood Albert Crane, the wearying watch he had held throughout the long night.

Within sound of breakers on the notorious windswept isle, Capt. Dyke and Parsons had frenziedly dropped all anchors in a vain attempt to halt the Dyke's steady drive to sea and certain destruction. Their only hope was to hold fast.

For hour after hour Crane had attempted the impossible, heroically trying to keep the schooner from being sucked to her death. As she strained at her anchor cables, he drove her little auxiliary engines to relieve the tension. Again and again and again . . . he had worked like a robot, driving the engines, waiting until the schooner was snapping at her cables, then driving the engines to relieve the strain once more. How many times he had repeated this macabre dance, the others could not say.

Finally, it was the end. Dyke's engines and anchors were not enough, the rampaging storm was pulling her, inch by struggling inch, to sea. Upon seeing he could not stop the irresistible, Crane instantly wheeled the bucking fisherman toward shore, driving her full speed to the beach, a snaking trail of white in the blackness. As the Dyke struck a reef, her little company put off in a dinghy. In the last desperate moments Crane had been unable to release the helm to secure a lifebelt.

When their dinghy splintered in the surf, Capt. Dyke had yelled to him to grab his belt, but the maelstrom of wind and wave and rock broke poor Crane's hold and he vanished in the breakers. Miraculously, Dyke and Parsons made it to the beach, more dead than alive, where they were rescued. Days later, Crane's body, beaten almost beyond recognition, was found on the shore.

Crane's gallant action of driving the schooner full speed onto the rocks "gave us a chance for our lives," said Capt. Dyke. "No finer fellow ever lived than he."

Oliver Gosnold Clark's "deed of heroism (was) unsurpassed in British annals," they said 44 years ago. Unlike the setting of storm on the high seas, as in the tale of Albert Crane, Clark earned his epitaph in a raging forest fire near Qualicum.

The summer of 1925 was unusually hot and dry, B.C. forests were a powder keg waiting to go off. Qualicum, Ladysmith and Capilano reported blazes out of control, that at Qualicum having charred more than 4,000 acres of trees, bridges, logging camps and equipment. Reinforcements were being rushed to the battle zones.

"Fifty men are fighting a losing battle against a forest fire which threatened to drive them to the water at any moment at Hanson Logging Camp No. 3, Campbell River District," reported The Colonist, June 28. "Relief gangs are snatching their brief periods of rest on booms far out in the water."

"According to the story told by men of Hanson's Camp No. 4, who arrived here (Vancouver) on the steamer Cheloshin, Camp No. 4 was destroyed by fire Wednesday. Oliver G. Clark, forest ranger, was burned to death in this blaze, and the entire equipment was destroyed."

Two days later, all fires were under control. It was reported a search party had located the body of the 35-year-old bachelor when he was noticed to be missing. A veteran of the First World War, Clark, who resided at Deep Cove, had fought with the 88th Battalion overseas. It had been his second season as a fire ranger in the Campbell River district.

At 10 o'clock in the morning of Nov. 4, 1925, Premier John Oliver, members of the legislature, prominent leaders of the lumber industry and comrades of the forestry department met at the legislative buildings to unveil a tablet to Ranger Clark, which reads:

"To the memory of Oliver Gosnold Clark, ranger, B.C. Forest Service."

"Who lost his life in the noble discharge of duty on the 25th day of June, 1925, at Port Neville, B.C."

"A fire, of which he had charge, was whipped beyond control by a sudden change of wind, leaving only a few minutes for escape. Ignoring his own danger, Clark carried the warning to his crews and saw them all safely to rafts, and boats in the bay. He returned to the logging camp to make sure that no one had been missed. His body was subsequently found by his comrades — his forest service badge clamped tightly in his lifeless

SYNOPSIS—The Flying Parretts have been island-hopping in the Bahamas in their four-place Piper Clipper, following a 3,000-mile flight across the continent. Last week they cruised from Great Exuma Island to New Providence, and set out on flight plan for Day Bimini. They found Bimini airport deserted, hiked to the end of the road and dock facing North Bimini and civilization, unable to close their flight plan as there were no telephones on South Bimini, and the ferry was not operating. We join them as they debate their next move.

YOU COULD THROW A STONE between the islands, but the ferry was broken down. The Parretts found themselves stranded on North Bimini (top) without a telephone, after being overdue on their flight plan from New Providence.

BIMINI ADVENTURE

(Second of Three Parts)

FLYING PARRETS

By ROY and MAUDE PARRETT

By now we were two hours overdue on our flight plan and visions of a massive air search getting under way haunted us. We had no idea that there were no telephones on South Bimini, and hardly expected to find the airport unattended. You could almost throw a stone across to North Bimini, but how to get there with the ferry broken down? Not a soul stirred among the few buildings on our side of the water.

We wandered along the shoreline until we came to a small resort, with all of the curtains drawn. But, inside, was a lone, colored bar-keeper. He was a huge fellow with a red jacket and a lapel badge which proclaimed "Adam Clayton Who?" He was apparently not one of Mr. Powell's fans.

Over a long, cool drink, he suggested that we might find a native fisherman who would row us over to North Bimini and communications. The resort was owned by a Torontonian, he told us, but it was the off-season and the proprietor was home for the summer.

Down at the dock a fisherman offered to row us across to North Bimini, and to wait while we got in touch with Nassau. North Bimini proved to be a quaint collection of doll-like houses with palm trees arching overhead, a curious combination of American energy in the yachts offshore, and Bahamian languor in the village street. The first three natives met said that they did not know where there was a telephone. Apparently they had little need for such modern gadgets.

Finally we found the government radio station, perched on a hill overlooking the sea. It was a weatherbeaten wooden structure, with the shutters closed against the heat. But inside was a bright young colored lad of 17, who quickly placed an "overseas" call to Nassau flight service to report our arrival. They took it all in the spirit of the area, not the least concerned that we had failed to report on time.

Next we called Miami Flight Service where all was hustle and bustle, and ruthless efficiency. We filed the special flight plan required to penetrate the American Defence Zone off the Florida coast, received military clearance and made customs arrangements, all in the twinkling of an eye. It was nice to transact these formalities in the usual North American manner, but we couldn't help wondering if the Bahamian way of life wasn't a better one. At least they developed few ulcers!

With the flight plan closed, there was time to look around. Bimini is truly an isle of the sea, with the Gulf Stream flowing past in front, and the Grand Bahama Bank stretching away behind. The sea was dotted with boats from Florida — the waters on one side teem with giant pelagic fish and small and colorful reef fish abound in the reefs. Bimini exists by and for fishing now that the rum-running days are a thing of the past.

Bimini-style fishing is to ordinary angling as stalking elephants is to hunting rabbits. The fish here can weigh hundreds of pounds. Special tackle, boats and techniques have been developed to make it easy for the tourist to take home huge mounted trophies which he has landed himself, for a price, of course. There is some doubt as to just who is playing whom!

Off the island is another monster of the sea — a huge cement ship which has been beached there for years. It was built by Henry Ford during the First World War, an experiment designed to save steel during the critical years of unrestricted submarine warfare. The unyielding concrete failed to ride the Atlantic swells, so the idea was abandoned. There is no doubt about the durability of cement ships, however. Every passing warship has used the hull for gunnery practice for years without reducing its bulk materially.

Another curiosity of Bahamian waters is the "holes" in the sea which plunge to depths unknown. These are caused by water from subterranean channels swelling up to the surface and eroding the coral in neat circular holes which look for all the world like pits ready to swallow up passing boats.

At the dock, our volunteer boatman was waiting, and we rejoined our badge-carrying bartender. He refused to explain the reason for the inscription, except to suggest that Powell "should have remained where he was."

After plying him with a few drinks, he volunteered to drive us to the airport. This time, a lone customs official was at the airport to accept our Transire cruising permit and to collect a $2 departure tax. A cloud of chalk dust and coral marked our departure for the mainland.

Under radar surveillance soon after leaving Bimini and committed to a precise course and altitude through the American Defence Zone, we were subject to interception by U.S. jet fighters. They ignored us for we were alone over a sparkling painted sea with only an occasional glimpse of smoke on the horizon from some freighter's funnel.

There was no navigation worry here, with the whole Florida coast as a target. But we couldn't help wondering how Amy Mollinson and

In 1894 Victoria Was Proud of New Legislative Buildings

By JAMES K. NESBITT

It was early 1894 in Victoria—75 years ago. The chief topic of conversation was the new legislative buildings, which were then just beginning to rise, to be opened four years later. Everyone here was terribly proud that Victoria was, at last, to become a stately capital; those old "birdcages," said the populace, were disgraceful.

The MLAs of the time, as MLAs of today, complained bitterly that they had not sufficient privacy, being so much all bundled up together that they could not talk with their constituents without prying eyes and too-alert ears about all over the place.

Somehow, I never feel sorry for MLAs and their comfort. It occurs to me they are, indeed, very well looked after. MLAs, then were, and are now, apt to become bigshot, to feel that the common masses don't properly appreciate their dignity. Anyway, be that as it may, I am sorry the last of the wonderful old "birdcages" was destroyed by fire in 1957.

Therefore we are, historically speaking, very much the poorer.

F. M. Rattenbury was the architect for the new legislative buildings. He was determined to put into them all the British Columbia materials that he could. He was sure there was proper stone in this province and so he went on an expedition to Haddington Island to find out. He was much impressed — and so gave order that Haddington Island stone would form the main support of our legislative buildings.

He sent to the island H. M. Wright and William Hartley, in charge of stonework on the building, and 10 quarrymen, and soon great chunks of stone were arriving on the building's property in James Bay. Thus is the lie given to those people who insist that the stone came from Scotland, by sailing ship around Cape Horn. This is stuff and nonsense and yet certain old-time Victorians insist it is so. It is not.

Mr. Rattenbury, in designing the buildings, took a very poor idea of the fact that rising on what he wanted to make an imposing square, was a red brick building — the drill hall, facing on Menzies Street. Mr. Rattenbury said it was a disgrace, a fine building, and all that, but that it should not be where it was. To no avail; his squawks went undeeded.

Sunday, February 2, 1969

The drill hall was opened early in 1894, and it still stands, today the headquarters of the government's motor vehicle branch, and, as Mr. Rattenbury would say, it just doesn't fit into Legislative Square, but there it is and I presume it will be there for a long while yet.

The Colonist gave a long report of the opening ceremony. Here are a few paragraphs: "It did not need the finely engraved invitation cards, or the promise of a select musical program to awaken an interest in the opening of the Drill Hall by His Honor Lieutenant-Governor Edgar Dewdney."

"The consequence was that the drill hall was far too limited to hold the congregation of the admirers of the Queen's soldierly uniforms, the companies of the battalion being cramped for room in going through their ordinary drills."

At this time there was married in Victoria a young man, who, then, could not possibly have known that one day he would occupy the premier's office in the new legislative pile.

There was this Colonist note: "A very quiet wedding — was — solemnized at Victoria West by Rev. W. D. Barber, the high contracting parties being Mr. Simon Tolmie, V.S. and Miss Harrap. Mr. John Lamberton was best man and Miss Harrap, sister of the bride, was maid of honor for the occasion."

"Notwithstanding the fact that the affair was strictly private, the happy couple were the recipients of many handsome gifts."

Dr. Tolmie went into politics, was for years Victoria's member in the House of Commons, and federal minister of agriculture. He was B.C.'s 1928-33 Premier, and was preparing to run for the House of Commons again in 1937 when he died. He was son of Dr. William Fraser Tolmie and his wife, who was Jane, the eldest daughter of Hon. John Work of Hillside Farm.

When I do my historical research I find it most difficult to stay on the one subject. My eyes here, there and everywhere, in complete fascination. I trust you will bear with me as I wander about all over everywhere.

I was interested to find items about the Rev. J. W. Flinton, father of Mrs. F. J. Merriman, and Eric and Austin Flinton, who all live today in Victoria. He was mostly in rural areas of the Saanich Peninsula and sometimes on the Gulf Islands. He did his rounds on horseback or in a horse-drawn buggy.

He was an outspoken reverend, and sometimes he gave out very bluntly, as we may judge from reading this note: "An entertainment was given by 'the girls of St. Luke's' at St. Luke's Sunday school — a goodly number being present."

"In the course of a few opening remarks, Rev. J. W. Flinton, the rector, said he found it difficult to understand why people could come out to a Monday evening entertainment in such numbers, but not very much to church on Sundays. He said he did not approve. There were some blushes noted when he said this, and a little squirming, and there were many resolves to be better Sunday church attendants in the future."

The Colonist then gave a few details of the concert: "Miss King's vocal solo was a treat and elicited great applause. Miss Dollie Moxon favored the audience with a song about 'The Poodle Dog,' which brought down the house — it really did."

A few days later Mr. Flinton left St. Aidan's: "An 'at home' was given — by the ladies' committee of St. Michael's Church, Lake District, to welcome the new pastor, Rev. J. W. Flinton. No hall being available, Mr. and Mrs. R. Daniels of Sunnyside Farm placed their residence at the disposal of the congregation."

"The following ladies and gentlemen rendered a program comprising songs, recitation and instrumental music, which was much appreciated: Mrs. Flinton and Mrs. Coverdale, the Misses Grove, Wood, Griffith, A. Daniels, E. Daniels, M. Daniels, Rev. Mr. Flinton, Messrs. Lavitz and Litchfield."

"The special item, however, was a violin solo by Mrs. Flinton which met with great applause, and Mr. Flinton, in that most interesting recitation 'The Bridge Keeper's Story' was really excellent."

"The new rector, in moving a vote of thanks to those who had so kindly used every effort to make the affair a success, said that he hoped the kindly feelings that had been shown Mrs. Flinton and himself would increase as they became better acquainted; he intended to unfurlingly discharge his duties, and he urged the laity to reciprocate and so bring everything in connection with the church to the same successful issue as the concert."

An oil portrait caused a stir in Victoria in early 1894. It was of Lieutenant-Governor Dewdney, The Colonist saying: "a very handsome painting — is receiving its finishing touches at Government House, at the hands of the artist, Rene Quentin, whose reputation as a skillful portrait painter is well sustained by this, his latest work."

"The painting is lifesize, and the figure three-quarters length. His Honor is dressed in his official uniform, and stands in front of a chair, from which he may be supposed to have just risen. The poise of the head, expression of face, and the easy, natural attitude in which he stands, are admirably handled."

the background, the gold lace of the uniform and the decoration of the chair, while giving richness of color to the general effect, are treated judiciously and harmoniously.

"The portrait is a work quite worthy of the artist by whom the well-known picture of Speaker Ouimet in the House of Commons at Ottawa was painted."

This portrait is now in a basement corridor of the legislative buildings, because there is nowhere else to hang it. What a pity! It is a beautiful portrait, in a huge carved gold frame that is an historical ornament in itself.

Presumably this oil once hung at Government House. How it got to the legislative buildings is a mystery.

Rene Quentin is now considered one of Canada's foremost painters. If you should stumble across his work at auction or in second-hand store grab him up quick.

The Poodle Dog Cafe was a favorite place of MLAs in 1894; indeed, it had been from its opening in 1885, and right through the turn of the century. In recent years there has been no Poodle Dog in Victoria, but now it's back—the Poodle Dog, named after the famous San Francisco restaurant of the same name.

In 1885 The Colonist announced the opening of Victoria's Poodle Dog: "A genuine French restaurant, on Yates Street, south side, between Broad and Government — it is similar to the Maison Dore and the Poodle Dog in San Francisco — it will excel in the culinary art.

"The meals will tempt the appetites of the most fastidious.

"Messrs. Louis Marboeuf and David Hamm are in charge. Mr. Marboeuf has had an extended experience in culinary work and will personally take charge of the gleaming kitchen.

"He was superintendent and chief cook for Maximilian of Mexico, and also chef at the Maison Dore in San Francisco, and latterly at the Driard House in Victoria.

"Mr. Hamm is the late steward and bar-keeper of the Driard and understands the business thoroughly.

"The dining room has been handsomely fitted up, and every attention given toward the comfort and convenience of the patrons.

"At the back of the main dining room are two private rooms tastefully draped and carpeted. The furnishings, cutlery, glassware and silverware are all new, and of the most approved patterns, furnished by Mr. John Eeiler.

"Special attention is given to serving delicacies, hitherto not obtainable in Victoria, embracing all kinds of game, turtles, frogs, homemade pastry and the finest kind of French coffee.

"The kitchen is a model and arranged with all the latest appliances, including an immense range, imported from San Francisco especially for the place, a fine boiler, French roasting rack, carving and steam tables.

"A large refrigerator has been built to keep the meats, game, etc. in good order, and it is safe to assert that the Poodle Dog Rotisserie will become one of the most popular resorts in the city."

Then, sure enough, I came across a Poodle Dog menu, as advertised in the newspapers: "Served from 5.30 to 8.30 p.m.—price, 50 cents.

M. and Mme. Marboeuf, looked upon their patrons as they would guests in their own home. The poor they fed at their kitchen door.
All Victoria was shocked one morning to read, in The Colonist, this account of sadness:—
"Lying insensible on a rude pallet in his cabin on Fisgard Street was found the emaciated form of an old man named Patti.
"The miserable apology for a bed was the only article of furniture, other than a stove and a few old carpenter's tools.
"The poor old man had been missed from the kitchen of the Poodle Dog Cafe, which he visited daily for years past to get what little food sustained him. Mme. Marboeuf always wanted him to have more, but he would not.

of the restaurant as to the cause of the old man's absence elicited the fact that he was very sick.

"After notifying the police, M. and Mme. Marboeuf did all they could to assist the sick man.

"Dr. John Duncan was called but it is thought his aid will be fruitless.

"Patti about 10 years ago was the owner of a blacksmithing establishment on Johnson Street, which burned down.

"From his appearance it is surmised he had fallen outside his little abode and not being able to rise to his feet crawled in on hands and knees to his tattered bed."

A horse-drawn ambulance was called, but as it tore through the streets bound for Jubilee Hospital Mr. Patti died.

I have in my possession two small restaurant vegetable dishes marked Steitz. They came from the days when vegetables were served separately, not lumped on the main dish with everything else, as today.

I knew Steitz was a restaurant man, but I knew nothing else of him until I read of his death in 1894.

The Colonist gave him a long obituary notice, saying he was born in Bavaria, and was "one of the foremost pioneers of Victoria."

The paper said: "The deceased gentleman arrived in Victoria, via California in 1857, and during the following year established himself in a modest restaurant business on Government Street, the present New England Hotel being the modern outcome of his venture. In 1861 Mr.

Steitz joined in the great trek to Cariboo gold fields.

"The deceased was devoted to friends and family, and had no ambition toward participating in the direction of public affairs, other than as a worthy citizen."

Mr. Steitz was one of those who joined in a group of pioneers to bring camels here for use as workhorses on the Cariboo road.

The Colonist told the story when he died:—

"The animals were brought here safely from California, and were accommodated in quarters on the Indian Reserve, where they excited a nine-days' wonder, and the long continued admiration of the younger generation.

"They were not a success in Cariboo, however. Their feet were too tender for the stony mountain roads, and their appearance struck terror into the hearts of the Indians and the horses, many of the latter tumbling in fright from the road into the boiling canyons of the river.

"One camel, which was left behind in Victoria to care for her offspring, when the remainder of the herd was taken to the mainland, was for sometime the chief attraction of the 'commonage' where now stands Craighdarroch Castle, Mrs. Robert Dunsmuir's stately residence, until climatic or other conditions removed it from the early sphere of its usefulness, whatever that was, though it appeared to be that of scaring horses half to death, and causing some fearful runaways."

hand — bearing mute testimony that under the supreme test he had magnificently conceived and nobly discharged his duty.

"Ranger Clark has gone but has left with us an inspiring example of heroism and devotion to duty, which will persist until the last forest fire is conquered and completely out."

The fabled Klondike goldrush disclosed another unsung hero, or heroine in this case, a young Dyce Indian mother. Five braves, our heroine with her baby in her arms, and another squaw were hiking along the trail at Crater Lake, in the forbidding mountains above Lynn Canal, when overtaken by a fierce blizzard in February, 1898. The party formed a human chain, roping themselves together, men in front breaking trail, the women following.

Somehow, in the blinding snow, the women lost hold of the precious safety line.

Upon realizing their peril, the other woman had shouted she would stumble on in the direction of the men and try to bring them back — if she could find them. And with that she had hunched on into the blizzard, leaving the terrified mother alone with her babe. The next morning, the storm was gone, and they found her on the trail, frozen. In amazement, rescuers noticed the dead woman to be almost nude. Clutched in her arms, locked in death, was a ragged bundle of clothing.

Upon poking the pathetic bundle, the men heard a high-pitched wail, and removed the baby, screaming with hunger but warm and healthy, from its wrappings. Then the awed whites realized the brave mother's last desperate act. As the cold had become more intense, she had stripped herself to wrap the clothing about her baby.

Last December, searchers found the wreckage of an Otter aircraft which had crashed after takeoff at Stewart. Near the plane sat Erwin Sonnenberg, suffering fractures of his pelvis, jaw, nose and left arm. RCMP officers were amazed to note that, despite his pain and injuries, Sonnenberg had made a gallant attempt to haul pilot David Napoleon LaCasse from the wreck. For 15 minutes, they said, he had struggled vainly to pull LaCasse to safety, fearing the plane would burst into flames.

However, with only one arm, weakened by his injuries and shock, he could not move the pilot's bulk and finally had to leave him. Rescuers told him LaCasse was dead.

These are but a few of history's unsung heroes. Oliver Clark was honored by a bronze tablet, but, like the others is forgotten. No monument recalls the heroism of Elizabeth Sea, Jacob Chipps or Albert Crane. Not even the wonderful Indian mother's name is known today.

It is a shame.

By RAY KERR

Victoria has seen its share of vessels, both large and small, but there aren't many than can tell as colorful a tale as the Thlaloca, a 20-foot sloop registered with the Royal Victoria Yacht Club.

The point is that most yachts on this coast were sort of "born and raised" here. But not the Thlaloca, owned by Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Zenker, formerly of Victoria, Sudbury, Ont., and West Germany. This yacht was created in faraway Ontario, and was born in a tent to boot.

Although only 20 feet, six inches long, with a six-foot, six-inch beam and 180 square feet of sail, the Thlaloca has already undertaken one trip around the world — starting from Victoria in 1963 — and has crossed the Atlantic on another occasion as the Zenkers sailed to their native Germany.

During the Christmas holidays, the Zenkers visited former Sudburians Mr. and Mrs. Richard Rasmussen in Powell River, and also dropped in on Victoria to say hello to a number of their acquaintances. That's where they told the story of the amazing Thlaloca.

Mr. Zenker began building his boat at Serpent River near Elliot Lake around 1960, just as the famed uranium boom was turning into the famed uranium bust. Zenker was helped by workmate Herbert Jenke, both working at Elliot Lake's Milliken Mine, now only a memory.

Mr. Zenker says his interest in boats was whetted by his career as naval cadet in West Germany after the Second World War. And the 35-year-old expert in craft-building points out that the Thlaloca won't be the last vessel he's built.

There was one snag — Mrs. Zenker at first was not too enthusiastic about boats.

"But she had no choice," Mr. Zenker recalls with a laugh.

Mr. Zenker said he designed his sloop after a vessel owned by a Vancouver doctor, whose name he'd forgotten.

Cedar planks were cut in one-inch strips, glued together and bolted with copper, then sanded and covered with a glass fibre cloth.

According to the builder, the latter was one of the most difficult operations, as the temperature had to be exactly 70 degrees Fahrenheit.

If the temperature is higher, the glass fibre could explode, if colder, it might not stick.

Resin was put on top. The builder said only a small amount of it could be used at once, and it had to be put on within 20 minutes.

Solid oak went into the transom. Cast iron or lead ballast of 1,300 pounds is under the hull.

The ship, he says, is 20 feet, six inches long, has a six-foot, six-inch beam and 180 square feet of sail. There is a 10-horsepower motor.

Hardware came from England and the United States, compasses from the Old Country and winches from Sudbury. Average speed of the Thlaloca is between 18 and 20 knots.

The Thlaloca was born in a tent Mr. Zenker pitched outside his Serpent River home, an unusual beginning for a ship and one that will be remembered in Canadian sailing annals. So far as sailing veterans can recall, it is the only vessel ever born in a tent.

The Zenkers equipped the Thlaloca with a transistor radio which includes a short-wave band, rather than two-way radio equipment.

"We found it the best thing to get directions from," Mr. Zenker pointed out.

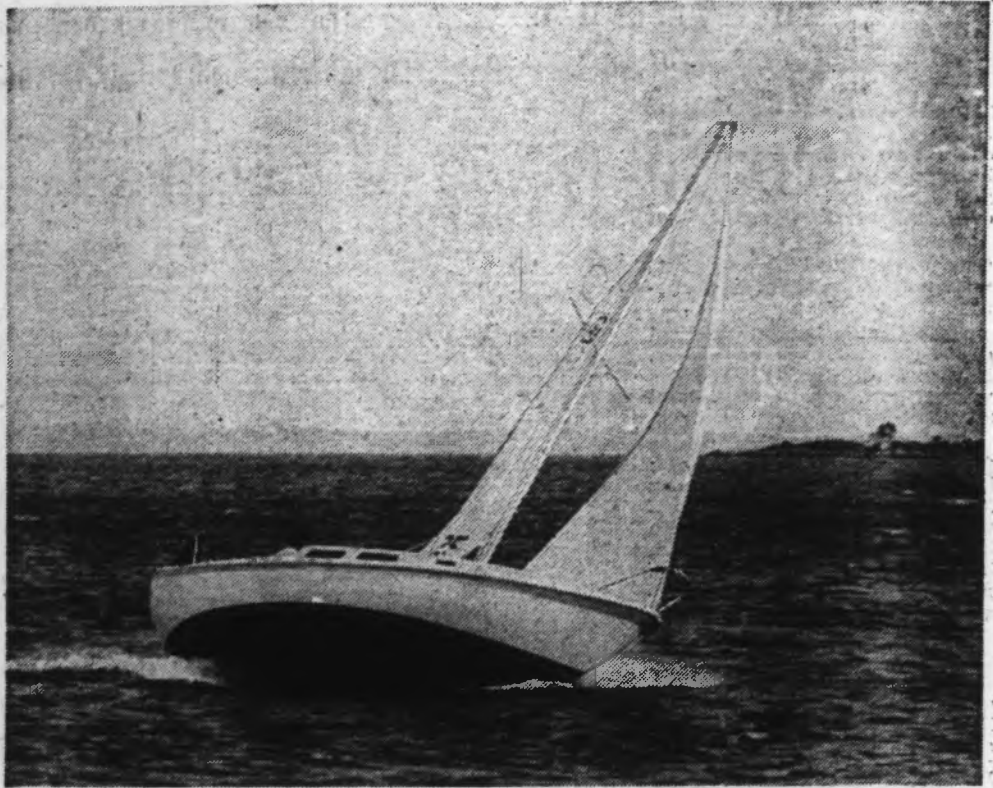

It was back in 1962 that the Zenkers — with the Thlaloca all shining and ready — towed the new vessel to California, then sailed up the Pacific Coast to the then-sunny Victoria.

"It was really sunny that year," Mr. Zenker recalled. "It makes me kind of wonder if this winter hasn't been loaned to you people by Northern Ontario. All our friends tell us this is the worst they've ever seen on the Coast."

One thing about the Thlaloca, he pointed out — there's no room for a lifeboat, and the only lifesaving equipment consists of two Mae West jackets.

"We've had to tie ourselves in the boat during storms," Mr. Zenker recalled, "and our steering is done with a rudder at the back. There's only enough room for supplies for one voyage."

The Adventurous Zenkers

Similar in design to the Zenkers' Thlaloca, a Victoria yacht shows just what a well-built vessel can do when wind is right. Zenkers' Thlaloca did it by crossing the North Atlantic route in 41 days last summer.

As Christmas approached in 1963, the Zenkers arrived in the Panama Canal when demonstrations against the United States were taking place.

So the Zenkers battened down the hatches and promptly drifted 1,500 miles off course, finally running out of provisions.

"On Christmas Eve a large ship found us, and we got the supplies we needed so badly," Zenker recollected. "It was the best Christmas we ever had."

From 1963 to 1966, the adventurous couple sailed around the world.

"We met the richest and the poorest people in the world," says Mr. Zenker, "and we'd say the poorest are the best."

While sailing around the world, Mr. Zenker worked in New Zealand, confining his activities to his first love — building boats.

The Zenkers found Tahiti "the best place we ever saw." In the West Indies, they met several retired Canadians "who are really enjoying themselves in the sun."

After returning from their around-the-world voyage, the Zenkers settled briefly in Sudbury, "to sort of catch our breath."

But breath-catching didn't last long, as the Zenkers quickly acquired itching sails and decided to take off again.

Their final big fling began last May, when they departed from Trenton, Ont., where Mr. Zenker's parents and sister live.

After taking on food and water to last 50 days — just nine days' more provisions than they needed to reach England — they left New York June 20.

"As on our previous voyages, we hoped to average 100 miles a day. And as usual Siggi (Mrs. Zenker) felt sick stomach, with her eyes cast greedily to the receding shoreline."

"Shortly before dusk the liner Ss. France overtook us. It made us feel depressed thinking of the warmth and security a great ship radiates."

"That night we endured a terrible sea which soon dispersed any negative feelings as our thoughts returned to our small world and how to make the best of it," Mr. Zenker went on.

"We treated reports of a deep tropical depression off the Georgia coast very seriously. We decided on a more northerly course, skirting the Long Island coast until the path of Hurricane Brenda, as the depression became known, appeared clearer."

"The Newport-Bermuda race was to start the following day, but was postponed at least a day. As we lay to on a bumpy sea, we concluded chances had to be taken to cross the Atlantic, and further delay would bring us closer to the next depression. After a couple of hours, we made sail, albeit very reluctantly."

Mr. Zenker paused for emphasis, as if reliving that encounter with the cruel sea all over again.

"Brenda took an erratic course, and so did we. After passing Nantucket light vessel in beautiful weather, we headed northeast, still watching the storm. Reports were discontinued, which we took as a good sign."

"It cleared our minds for a few minutes only. Hurricane Candy had hit the U.S. coast, and there was no telling where it would go."

"After one week we had sailed only 504 miles. Light wind conditions the second week required so much sail handling that by the end, we had covered only 1,054 miles, with 1,996 to go."

"Sail ho!" Siggi screamed from the cockpit. "We had difficulty believing our eyes. It was a large sloop. Then we saw a yawl. No doubt we had made contact with the transatlantic racing fleet."

"We toasted this meeting with a tot of rum and took great pleasure in thinking we must have scared those big fellows to think a boat less than half their size was right up in front."

Mr. Zenker said the Thlaloca raced through fog and rain, and the ever-present cross-sea, which made the going "extremely rough."

"Worse, the inside of the vessel was soaked with condensation. Navigation was a nightmare as the sun was behind clouds for days on end, and stars appeared but seldom."

"Strong southerly winds knocked us farther south of our course. Tumultuous cross-seas made her yaw heavily."

"As the seas yanked her up peaks, she'd abandon her quarter-wave and skid sideways-ahead in a wild, unplanned manner. We were afraid of rudder failures. Going around the world we lost the rudder four times in similar conditions."

"A ship hove in sight, and changed course to investigate what must have been a strange sight, us bobbing about in an incredible manner," Zenker continued.

"We cheered each other and too soon she disappeared beyond the seas and the grey horizon."

"Within 500 miles of our goal, a giant anti-cyclone had firmly established itself across our course. It seemed impossible to make headway. These conditions lasted for the rest of the voyage."

"After a voyage of 41 days, we tied up at a

Who Has Time to Read Any More?

By VIDA WELLWOOD

The year 1948 marked the beginning of the book era in Comox. With no book store in Comox or Courtenay, only a few books stocked in drug stores, the only source of reading, other than newspapers, was the tax supported Vancouver Island Regional Library supplying 250 books quartered in a moveable case in the Bay store. One-sixth of these were changed monthly.

At the time the village had a population of about 700 and a feeding district of about the same number. The 250 books were simply not enough, therefore a library committee undertook by personal canvass to collect a few additional books to make a start, getting together 225 adult books and 75 children's books. These were not discards from attics, but good books, most of them.

Two schemes to bring in some revenue were instituted. For the book club, anyone could join. A member paid $3 a year, with the money going for the cream of the spring and fall list, these books being reserved that first year for members, then going on the general shelves.

About 30 to 40 people supported this plan every year. For all other adult books, except the Regional Library books, a charge of 5c a book for two weeks was levied. All proceeds went to the purchase of new books. Careful shopping at second-hand stores in Vancouver and Victoria resulted in many good purchases for 25c and 19c.

The 5c charge per book for two weeks was not popular with everyone. One man who had paid his nickel felt he should have an additional two weeks without further charge. When it was explained that this was the same as charging out a new book, he said: "Well, I won't take it then. My wife is only half-way through it, but as I have read it, I'll just tell her how it ends."

Another old gentleman insisted that he and his wife should be the very first to receive all new books, because, you see, they weren't too sure of other people's sanitation!

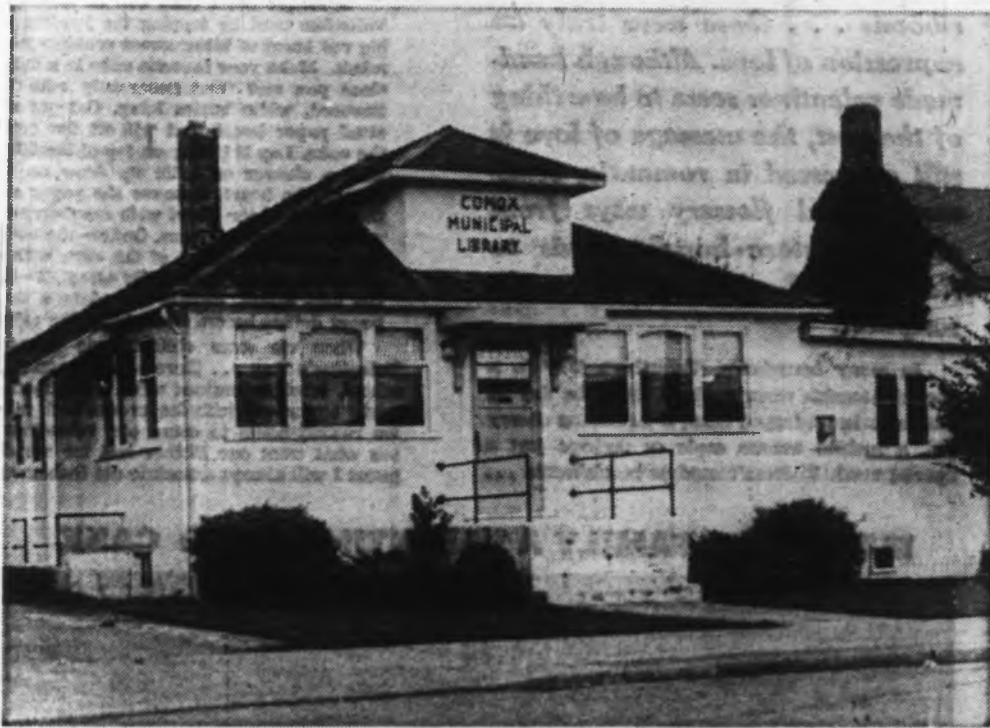

It was surprising how fast the library built up, with at least a few "new" books on the shelves each month. The library started in one small room in the village municipal hall. By the end of the first year, the larger room was needed. By October of 1952 they were again bursting at the seams, and there was no more room at the Village Hall. The school came to the rescue and offered a room too small for a classroom, for the use as a library for the students.

Imagine for a minute the small room in the basement of the school, 224 square feet, two volunteer workers helping the children select the books, the children lining up, passing through the stacks, choosing their books as they moved or were pushed, clutching their selections in their two hands!

These were hectic days but the enthusiasm of the children convinced Mrs. Simon and her staff that a good start had been made. The grant from the school board, plus a donation from the PTA, plus the return by Mrs. Simon of the amount paid her by the board for services rendered, reached the grand total of $780 to be spent on books and supplies.

It was in August of 1953, when the library had been in operation for five years that librarian Margo Simon wrote to the Carnegie Corporation of New York attaching a request for aid in the purchase of non-fiction books: "We consider our library an achievement. I myself have never seen a better example of whole-hearted community endeavor. It would not be an exaggeration to say that at least half our village of 700 has contributed in some way to its building up, either in money, or books, or services. We couldn't have done it otherwise." A very nice letter was received in return stating that the Corporation had gone out of the library field, therefore the answer was "No."

The town of Comox has time to read, that's who. Circulation figures for the year ending Jan. 1, 1968, showed 97,479 books charged out through the library and the three schools. From the beginning, the schools and the library worked close together, in the belief that co-operation would result in both children and adults being adequately served.

BUSIEST BUILDING IN COMOX

With the termination of the service of the Vancouver Island Regional Library in the spring of 1953, in effect since 1946, other facilities had to be provided. The village children were able to obtain books three times a week at the village library. Arrangements were made to transport the rural children by bus to enjoy the same advantage. Twice a week, at 2 p.m., the bus shuttled back and forth until school closing, the children being allowed to charge out two books each. This system was in operation for 1953-54.

In 1955, two new classrooms were built at the Robb Road site. The basement primary room at the old site was now available for a library. The classes were to have a 40-minute library period. Grades One to Four were allowed two books a week, Grades Five to Eight, three books. Arrangements were made to transport the children from the new school to the library at the old school.

On fine days, they enjoyed a half-mile walk, but a car pool was organized for rainy days. The teacher at the temporary classroom at the church hall walked her pupils to the village library. Many Comox citizens were inspired by the sight of the students, in pairs, marching to the library, singing.

In December, 1957, the Comox PTA passed a resolution turning the proceeds of the play My Sister Elleen over to the library for the purchase of books. Plays such as Junior Miss, Arsenic and Old Lace and Elleen made $500 for the library.

A hilarious production of the play given for the old-age pensioners was viewed by this audience in complete and deathly silence. The actors felt they had really flopped, when the spokesman for the senior group arose and thanked them profusely, saying: "It was so funny we had the hardest time not to laugh."

W. M. McGILL, principal of Robb Road School found that the ratio of book circulation to pupil enrolment in 1958 was 52 books borrowed per pupil per year. The voracious reader balanced the indifferent or poor reader but the slow ones had not been neglected as many books of high interest level, but low reading difficulty, were available to them. Their reading was inconspicuously supervised.

The standard of excellence could not have been achieved or maintained without a librarian of Mrs. Simon's qualifications. Her relations with both staff and community were friendly. Her aim was to start the children reading anything, and she would guide them from there.

Many were the willing workers who gave of their time and energy for the good of the library. Some of the students came faithfully from eighth grade to graduation to help on library days. Among others was Marilyn Eyer who helped every Saturday afternoon and evening, and who could take over in an emergency when Mrs. Simon was unable to come; Susan Edwards, also, and Ann Tamboline. Some of these young people aspired to reading every book in the place, and nearly accomplished their ambition.

At the April, 1962, meeting the chairman, Mrs. E. Cliffe, reported that the village had started work on the new municipal hall; that the expectation was that the building would be completed by late summer or early fall; that the municipality would bear some of the expenses of remodelling the front room of the present hall for use as a library.

November, 1962: "This being the first meeting to be held in the new premises, great satisfaction was expressed by all members. All the books in the library had been moved and re-shelved in one evening. Thanks were expressed to those who helped, also to the self-appointed committee who served coffee all afternoon the first day the library was open."

It wasn't all dry, dusty statistics. Librarians have a rare sense of humor. Library nights,

St. Valentine's Day is not only for lovers. It can be a red letter day for everyone from 8 to 80. Few of us forget the sentimentality of February with its time-honored theme of hearts and flowers. A century older than the Christmas card, the Valentine card still says "I love you." When we were children most valentines were hand made . . . we pasted paper lace, ribbons and cut-out bouquets of roses, forget-me-nots, birds and ribbons . . . these were truly an expression of love. Although hand-made valentines seem to be a thing of the past, the message of love is still expressed in romantic, sentimental and flowery ways from elaborate store-bought cards to flowers and gifts of every description.

In many households, Valentine's Day is a special occasion when mothers mark the day by making a heart-shaped cake, a lattice-top cherry pie, a molded tomato aspic or perhaps just a special meal. It doesn't need to be elaborate . . .

top cherry pie with Valentine's Day. This was our favorite dessert treat. How about trying it on your family for this special day?

OLD FASHIONED LATTICE-TOP CHERRY PIE . . . pastry . . . 1½ cups sifted all purpose flour, ½ tsp. salt, ½ cup shortening or lard and 4 to 5 Tbsp. cold water. Filling . . . 2 15-oz. tins tart red cherries, 1 cup sugar, 3 Tbsp. quick tapioca, ¼ tsp. almond flavoring, dash salt, a few drops red coloring and 1 Tbsp. butter. For the pastry . . . combine sifted flour and salt, then cut in shortening until pieces are the size of small peas. Sprinkle with water a tablespoon at a time, mixing gently with a fork until it forms a ball.

Next, make the filling while the dough chills. Drain the cherries, reserving ½ cup of the liquid. Combine cherries, the reserved liquid, sugar, tapioca, salt, almond flavoring and food coloring. Let stand for 15 minutes. Line a 9-inch pie plate with about two-thirds of the pastry (keep enough to make strips for top). Fill the pie shell with filling and dot with bits of butter. Make a lattice top with balance of pastry or cut out a number of small hearts and arrange on top of filling. If you make the lattice top . . . lay strips in crisscross pattern and fold edges of lower crust over pastry strips. Flute the edges. Bake in a 425 degree F. oven for 45 to 50 minutes or until the crust is golden and juice bubbling up.

For a really glamorous party dessert make heart-shaped meringues and fill with canned cherry pie filling and whipped cream. Contrary to some beliefs, meringues are not difficult to make exactly. These are meringues . . . Mothers and grandmothers were so good at them at high speed and gradually. When added the meringue was a lovely satisfaction. Baking must be

It isn't the lacy trimmings but the thought behind the idea.

Red, of course is the color of the day and this is a reasonably easy color to play up in food . . . there is cranberry juice and cranberries, tomato juice and lovely red tomatoes, we can make red jelly hearts with strawberry and raspberry jelly, cherries in a meringue heart or a cherry pie would be a fine Valentine touch, and we might bend red pepper strips or pimiento into heart shapes to garnish salad. These are only a few colorful suggestions.

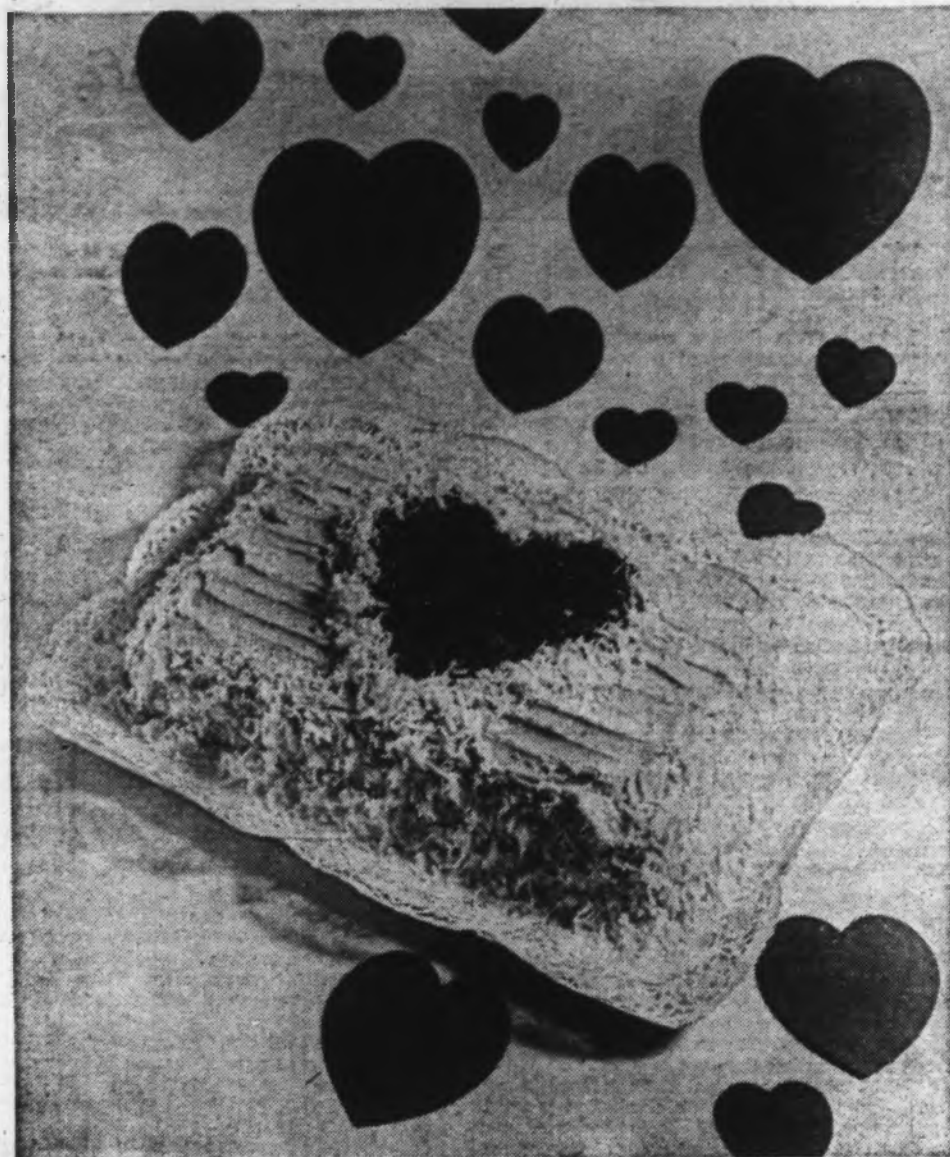

Today we are going to put our heart into our baking.

There will be no mistaking the obvious when this first dessert appears on Feb. 14.

A simple sheet cake can be turned into a Valentine card by topping the frosting with a big red heart of bitter-sweet cranberry-orange relish. Make your favorite cake in a 9x13-inch sized pan and frost generously with vanilla flavored, white butter icing. Cut out a good sized paper heart that will fit the centre of the cake. Lay it lightly on top of the icing and with a skewer or knife tip draw an outline around the heart. Remove the paper and fill the centre of the heart with cranberry-orange relish or raspberry jam. Outline the red heart and around the edges of the cake with sweet coconut shreds for a frilly effect. To further the lacy effect, outline the plate with white paper doilies before assembling the cake.

When we were children we always loved Valentine's Day . . . there was always a party at school, when valentines were exchanged and the party topped off with ice cream and cake. Then we rushed home to count our valentines and to see what treat our Mother had for our dinner. I guess I will always associate old fashioned lattice-

DEAR HELOISE:

I've got a real good hint for those who don't have a shoeshine kit and keep all those bottles and cans of shoe polish, rags, brushes, etc., in a drawer or old shoe box.

I got an empty soft-drink carton and use it for a shoeshine kit!

One thing about it, it's got six compartments. Brushes can be stood up in one, cloths tucked in one, cans in one, and your bottles in the rest.

The handiest thing I find about this is that when you get ready to shine your shoes, all you have to do is grab the carton and you have the whole kit and caboodle.

Mildred Marland

And, gals, remember not to throw away your old nylon stockings. Tuck them in one of those little 'compartments, too. They're terrific for shining your shoes, and if you have just one brush, stick it down inside a stocking, then brush away.

If you are using brown polish, most of it will collect on the stocking instead of the brush. When changing to black polish, use another piece of stocking. Remember to take your scissors and snip them in two to fit the brush.

It's the greatest.

ous party dessert igues and fill with ud whipped cream. meringues are not difficult to make. Just follow directions exactly. There are a few rules.

These are the rules for making a perfect meringue . . . an electric beater is best. (Our Mothers and Grandmothers used a wire whip, but arms were stronger in those days). Beat egg whites at high speed until frothy, then lower the speed and begin adding the sugar VERY gradually. When the last of the sugar has been added the meringue should be at top volume with a lovely satiny gloss. It should be very stiff. Baking must be slow, at a low temperature.

MERINGUE SHELLS . . . 4 egg whites, ¼ tsp. cream tartar, dash salt, ½ tsp. almond or vanilla extract and 1 cup fine sugar. If you run the sugar through a fine sieve any large crystals can be eliminated. Have the egg whites at room temperature. Beat until foamy, add cream tartar and salt. (The cream tartar makes the bubbles more stable and durable). Now reduce speed of beater and begin to add the sugar very slowly not more than a couple of teaspoons at a time, beating a minute after each addition.

Beat several minutes after the last sugar is added. You can hardly overbeat a meringue, underbeating is the most likely cause of failure.

To make the meringues heart shaped . . . with a cardboard pattern draw the hearts on a piece of unglazed brown paper, cut to fit your baking sheet. Leave a couple of inches between each heart. Grease the paper and with a spoon or piping bag fill in centre of each outline. Now use the back of a teaspoon to hollow out and make a depression in the heart. This will force some of the meringue to build up around the rim. This very stiff meringue is very easy to shape and work with. (Circular meringues can be made instead of hearts if desired). Bake these in a preheated 250 degree F. oven for about an hour. They should not be brown, just a pale bisque color. To be sure they are completely dried out I like to leave them in the oven, with the heat turned off for an additional hour. When completely cold they should be stored in an airtight tin or container. Fill just before time to serve.

Let the young bakers have a party and make their own simple butter cookies which can be iced with a pretty pink frosting. Let them make mugs of a hot pink milk drink topped with billowy clouds of whipped cream. Even milk can be party special when made with the following recipe . . .

CUPID'S KISS . . . 2 cups hot milk, ¼ cup maraschino cherry juice, 8 large marshmallows, ½ tsp. vanilla and a tablespoon of chopped maraschino cherries. Combine maraschino cherry juice, milk, marshmallows and flavoring. Heat over medium heat until mixture is smooth and hot, stirring occasionally. Pour into 4 mugs, top with whipped cream and sprinkle with chopped cherries. Use a little red vegetable coloring in the milk if a deeper pink is desired.

BRIDE'S CORNER

TIPS FOR VALENTINES DAY . . .

A cherry or a bit of red jelly in the morning grapefruit starts the day on a festive note.

Tomato aspic molded in individual molds (heart shaped if you have them) makes a gay salad accent. Or mild aspic in a thin layer in a jelly roll pan and when set cut out hearts with a cookie cutter . . . use as garnishes.

A fluffy white icing may be sprinkled with her sugar (or red jelly crystals).

Trim dessert plates with coconut "lace".

Baking powder biscuits cut with a heart-shaped cutter, and to make the biscuits pink use tomato juice instead of the milk called for to mix them.

A flock of little red cardboard hearts or a big one to centre the table is nice.

So I substituted a long, slender, clear-type bulb used in range hoods in kitchens. For this I made a slipcover of double thickness green nylon net and slipped it on over the bulb.

It looks like a mantle and provides that greenish cast to the light so characteristic of gas lights. The net doesn't melt from the heat of the bulb as they only come in 40-watt size.

Here is a hint on the best utilization of closet space:

If all short items are hung at one end of the clothes pole and all long items at the other end, a large space is left under the short items for use as storage.

DEAR HELOISE:

The ruffles from slips which are too long for our short dresses make lovely underwear for small dolls.

I made several sets for my little daughter's dolls and she and her little friends think they are adorable.

We think you are also adorable. And a great mother, might I add?

THUMBS UP!

DEAR HELOISE:

When my little boy was small he mashed his thumb in a screen door.

In order to get him to soak it in the warm solution, I put the solution in a quart jar and put several small plastic toys in it.

He played with the submerged toys for hours and soaked his sore thumb at the same time without even knowing it!

THAT'S COOKING!

DEAR HELOISE:

I had my husband nail a narrow strip of shiny aluminum lawn edging around the front edge of the shelf over my stove.

The aluminum matches the trim on the stove and I avoid the old mess of changing greasy, spotted shelf paper so often because now grease spatters hit the aluminum instead of the shelf. It's easy, of course, to just wipe the edging off with a damp cloth.

DEAR HELOISE:

Mothers who buy packaged ice-cream cones often find a cone or two with a hole in the bottom. It can still be used, however!

Just drop a few large bread or cookie crumbs into the cone, then fill it with ice cream. Prevents leaking and saves children's disappointment at having to throw away a cone.

We have those textured walls which are so popular nowadays. Whenever I get a nick in the wall, I go immediately to the children's colored chalk box, mark over the place, then take an old powder puff and smear it gently.

If there is a nick or a nail hole I want covered up or if the scratch is very deep, I wet the chalk, mark across it and when it is practically dry, rub it with a powder puff.

Sure blends that chalk into the surrounding area.

When I first came to the west coast of Vancouver Island, nearly 40 years ago, there were a number of shantymen, or hermits, who had renounced civilization for one reason or another—possibly to escape the law, or a wife, or they were just plain fed up with society. They lived off the land, hunting and fishing and spending most of their time with the fundamental aspects of life.

Barkley Sound still contains a few rugged individualists who preserve their individuality by being as independent as possible of society.

INDEPENDENT PEOPLE

To serve these men was the original aim of the Christian Shantymen's Association, whose vessel, the Messenger, plied the waters of the west coast calling on all known shantymen in the bays, inlets and islands of the coast. They gave them magazines and books and, if so desired, held a service on the boat.

Now-a-days there are few, if any, of these individuals, possibly because one can insulate and isolate himself just as effectively in the modern city—and live on welfare at the same time. Perhaps this is the reason the existing Messenger III, so well known on the west coast, is now up for sale.

Last summer I paid a visit to a pair of individualists, Nelson Dunkin and his wife Myra, who live alone on Tzartus (Copper) Island in Barkley Sound. They are not hermits in any sense of the word, being very sociable, but they do like the independent, and consequently isolated, way of life.

Ten years ago, while living on a floathouse in Kildonan, Nelson acquired one of Captain William Spring's old trading posts on Tzartus Island, located in the lee of Clifton Point.

The property contains 105 acres, mostly waterfrontage, and a survey map shows the location of the original trading post buildings and wharf. Geographical features include a lovely sandy beach with a waterfall at one end, and the forested slope of Copper Mountain containing several mineral claims, some still in good standing.

One of the claims, discovered and worked in 1882 by Captain Stamp, and located near the top of the mountain, is now held by the Empire Development Company. It can be reached by an old trail leading up the mountain from a small bay on the north side of Clifton Point where Nelson has his home. However, as most of the blazes marking the trail have been obliterated by time, a guide is essential, as I found from experience.

Another mine, according to an 1896 report, was located "on a small neck of land on the east side of the island, near a good sheltered anchorage." This would be Clifton Point. The report went on to say that "a shaft had been sunk 50 to 60 feet on a ledge of magnetite," which outcropped irregularly along the shore.

For a man with a heart condition, Nelson Dunkin would put many men to shame. After buying the old trading post from the executors of the estate, he commenced building himself a large house on the shore of the sheltered bay previously referred to, mostly out of materials gathered on or near the spot. The house was built over the water so that at high tide the water lapped under the floor and one had to cross a small bridge to reach the shore.

I asked him why he didn't build on the shore. That, pointed out Nelson, would have necessitated clearing the land and would have taken too long.

NELSON DUNKIN'S HOUSE ON TZARTUS ISLAND

The project had started with temporary living quarters on the beach so that they could move in as soon as possible and, like many temporary situations, became permanent and was added to from time to time.

By the time he was ready to think about furnishings, the old Cable Station at Bamfield was being closed down and the furniture and equipment sold. He and his wife haunted the Station for several weeks, picking up many antique pieces as well as modern furnishings for a song.

As I was the one who was disposing of these assets for the Cable Station, I met them at that time.

Shortly after Nelson finished building (if a house can ever be said to be finished) and furnishing his home, their son and daughter both got married and moved away, leaving them alone on the island.

They really are isolated, the nearest habitation being the Indian settlement at the mouth of Sarita River. Bamfield, the nearest village, is 10 miles by water down the Trevor Channel, and Kildonan five miles away in Uchucklesht Inlet.

They have no means of communication with the outside world: no roads, no telephone, no television, only a transistor radio. However they are never bored, because when people have to do everything for themselves, there are not enough hours in the day for that.

Although he burned wood for heat and cooking, I could not help but notice that Nelson did not have any woodpile on hand. I asked him why. He replied that he didn't believe in it; living from day to day was enough for him.

Nelson has carved some excellent examples of folk art, including the sign for Morrison Hall at Camp Ross on Pachena Beach. On the birth of his grandson, he made and carved a cradle, inscribing the sides with biblical quotations and painting a bagpipe-playing angel at the head—thereby inferring that all, or most, angels are Scottish.

Among the many interesting relics he has collected are an old hand-operated miner's drill, a small organ, with bellows operated by foot power, and other odds and ends of mechanical, historical and social antiquity.

His wife Myra, who likes the life, admitted that it sometimes gets lonely now that the children have gone.

Asked what he was going to do with his three-storey house now that they were alone, Nelson said that he was toying with the idea of building summer cabins for tourists who wanted to escape from it all. On the other hand he thought perhaps they, too, should think about moving a little closer to the outside world.

Sooner or later, one has to face up to the fact that he cannot be entirely independent.

Twice a week, on Tuesdays and Thursdays, Nelson makes the trip to Bamfield in his commercial fishing type boat Raven, to collect mail and purchase provisions. Should any freight be consigned to him, the mailboat Lady Rose would deliver it to his own float at Clifton Point, and, should they want the Lady Rose to call for passengers, or any other reason, all they have to do is flag her down and she would obligingly veer from her course.

Incidentally, if you happen to be on the Lady Rose travelling to Port Alberni on the return trip from Bamfield, don't be surprised if she suddenly slows down and drifts off Clifton Point for 10 minutes or so while the whole crew throw lines overboard and start jigging for cod. It's their way of 'taking home the bacon' for supper—and of showing their independence.

West Coasters are like that.

VICTORIA'S RUM SHIP MADE $1,000,000 TRIPS

By CECIL CLARK

Just recently I threw the spotlight on Wharf Street's booze trade of 40-odd years ago, which was back in the day when small craft hustled 50-case lots to the Gulf Islands, where in turn they were met by speedy American craft who paid cash on the barrel head and departed for Seattle.

Maybe as you read you wondered about the mechanics of the trade, prices and costs, the ultimate profit. Of course you could only get this from the big boys, the firms registered under the laws of B.C., who paid their taxes and whose stock holders often represented the backbone of the city's business life. And if you think I'm going to give you any names, you're crazy!

For, as the Unsinkable Molly Brown once sagely remarked: "We are a little too near our past."

I guess there were about a dozen firms in Victoria exporting liquor during U.S. prohibition, which ran from 1917 to 1933. Some had an exclusive on certain brands. In our brief prohibition era Double "O" (Old Orkney) was handled by Duncan and Gray who mainly supplied the drug stores for the prescription trade. And don't kid yourself this wasn't big business. In fact such was the plague of colds and sore throats, that finally the government opened Victoria's first liquor store just to the west of the Dominion Hotel on Yates Street. Tommy Horne was in charge to cater to the afflicted.

Vancouverites didn't escape the malady as witness one elderly physician who made $6,000 a month from prescriptions until the Liquor Board stepped in and caused his suspension. His receptionist even hustled prescriptions among the genuinely sick in the waiting room!

Which kind of reminds me of Roy Oldstead's sister.

Roy was a captain in the Seattle police department, who must have made a million with his control of the booze trade on Seattle's waterfront. Not a bottle or case moved without his nod. He had a sister, a nice young woman, who nightly gave bedtime stories for children over one of the Seattle radio stations.

Someone ultimately got wise to the fact that Roy's rum running skippers, no matter where they were, always tuned in to the kiddies' hour. Seems they were getting cryptic and veiled messages where to pick up their loads!

However, let's not digress. We were talking of brands. A popular export brand was King George the Fourth, handled exclusively by R. P. Rithet. Pither and Leiser handled Teachers, and Western Freighters (of which more anon) had as their specialty Granny Taylor and Peter Dawson.

Some of these by-gone operations are still somewhat shrouded in mystery.

Probe as I may I cannot find where Western Freighters got their ships from, but as some of them were passed over from the Canadian Government merchant marine (which couldn't operate coastwise) it makes me think that maybe the Canadian government* (perish the thought) was in the liquor business. Anyway it's an idea to toy with.

I said I had been probing, and I can add that some of my information comes from a gentleman now resident behind the tweed curtain who did the Western Freighter's paper work. Some of the anecdotes about smalltimers I got from veteran customs man Joe Dakers.

Joe, pushing 80, and a widower, joined the Customs in 1911. He was overseas in the First World War with the 29th Battalion, and retired about 13 years ago. He lives today at 235 St. Andrews Street with his married daughter, Irma, who is now Mrs. Frank Dunn. Frank is in plumbing supplies with Sherets.

In checking the comings and goings of the export trade Joe speaks of cargoes that beggar description. Like the time he checked out 70,000 cases at the outer docks. It came in by Furniss Withy and went right out again . . . to California.

The bonded warehouse out there held 100,000 cases and it was full.

The local group known as Western Freighters had a fleet that consisted of the ex-fishery protection cruiser Stadacona (sister ship of the Malaspina), the Prince Albert, the Chief Squigaid, the schooner Pescawha and the auxiliary three-master Speedway. The Stadacona, renamed Kuyakuzmt could haul 22,500 cases, the Prince Albert about 20,000, and the Speedway about 24,000.

When they cleared from Victoria, they ultimately lay off the Farrallone islands, just west of the Golden Gate, so that speedy craft from San Francisco could whip out under cover of night (or fog) to pick up a load.

Each mother ship was figured to make a round trip from Victoria every six weeks. No cash on the barrel head routine with these boats.

Deals were made in advance on shore, the rum runner equipped with the torn half a dollar bill on which was crayoned the amount of the load. The Victoria skipper had the other half of the bill. If the numbers on the two halves matched, the requisite number of cases went over the side.

To avoid any tell-tale bank transactions between San Francisco and Victoria, the cash, believe it or not, came here by "courier" in suit cases.

Sometimes a suitcase was loaded with gold because (shades of Josephus Daniels who dried it up) the U.S. navy paid in gold for illicit booze.

What kind of men ran the liquor ships? Buccaneers? Cutthroats? Not so you could notice. In fact they were usually quiet, sober family men. People like Jack Nicholls the skipper of the Prince Albert, or J. O. Vosper of the Kuyakuzmt, and Bob Pamphlet of the Pescawha. Perhaps you remember how Bob, on a trip to California, sighted the sinking lumber schooner Caoba in a raging gale off the Columbia River. By good

JOE DAKERS . . . 20,000 CASES OF SCOTCH.

Years ago Grace Money Bell received a present of a tape recorder from her son in order that she and her husband, Capt. Howard Bell, might send him letters on tape, and this gift opened up a whole new field of endeavor for Grace Bell. Returning from church one Sunday she noticed that her garden on St. Patrick Street was simply alive with red-winged blackbirds. On impulse, she got the tape recorder and stuck the microphone out of the window and to her amazement found she had recorded a symphony of bird song.

From then on her interest grew. Not only did she delight in the music she now heard but she saw, also, the possibility of using the sounds for educational purposes and when she found, to her distress, that on educational radio programs in Vancouver, imitations of bird sounds were being used, her interest was further aroused.

Always fond of music she was most sensitive to sounds, not only of birds, but of all wild life, animals and insects. So she began her research. For several years she had been banding birds and going out regularly with birder members of the Victoria Natural History Society. A. R. Davidson — Davie, to all the birder fraternity — was a wonderful teacher and taught her to identify by sight and sound, habitat and season, until she "got the hang of it," she says, and she then put herself through the routine steps with bird books, binoculars, and other birders.

The banding operations succeeded in determining the question of when the house finches (linnets) depart and when they return. Apparently they stay the year round and the population is on the increase. Some probably do go further afield she thinks but she has never had returns from other than the Saanich Peninsula. A desirable small finch, pretty with its bright red markings, lovely too, in voice, high and lyrical. They appreciate sunflower seeds and relish suet as do most birds.

Grace Bell is grateful to the many people who have helped her. Her husband, in the early days, provided invaluable assistance in construction work and all mechanical matters. Dr. and Mrs. G. C. Carl were the first to take her on a recording venture.

It was a stormy morning, very early, and recording on the sea was a tricky business. Mrs. Carl kept the boat, the Carlsark, off the rocks and Dr. Carl, sitting on the cabin roof, held the parabolic reflector between his knees, directing it at the gulls on the island while Grace listened with earphones at the recorder inside the sheltered cabin entrance and recorded the sounds.

It was not long, though, she recalls, before she had to hang her head over the stern as the boat heaved and tossed. But how happy she was when the Carls asked her to go out again the next morning at 7 o'clock. She knew then that she must continue recording, persevering in spite of failure or setbacks.

She read of the work in this field of Dr. W. W. H. Gunn of Toronto, and she wrote to him. He is the foremost recordist and biological several on the Audubon Wildlife Theatre and on educational records and projects. They have also been used on local radio and television film and discs of Peterson's Field Guide of Western Bird Song and on a National Geographic record. consultant in Canada. His help was continuous in all the many aspects involved and when it was discovered that he and Howard Bell had known one another back in army days the letters and communications on ways and means of acquiring better apparatus and better results became a three-way effort.

Dr. Gunn has used many of Mrs. Bell's tapes and is continuing to do so on nature broadcasts on CBC and heard on the program Outdoors with the Experts. Currently her tapes are being used in the library of sounds of nature in the laboratory of ornithology at Cornell University, and she has worked with Chess Lyons, the well-known British Columbia author.

The new provincial museum at Victoria has numerous recordings made by her and will use them in the diorama displays. In the near future one may stand before a display, for instance, of California quail, presented in their natural habitat — press a button and, with earphones, listen to the voice of the quail as recorded by Grace Bell.

How often has she set off in the grey morning — sometimes as early as 4 a.m. — and, accompanied by a friend as dedicated as herself, driven to some spot on the island where she set up her equipment. Loaded down with a 20-inch parabolic reflector, hand-held, a 40-inch parabolic reflector on tripod, a very special recorder, a microphone, 12 batteries, earphones, extra tape and a few little tools for splicing and repairs, they would commence their journey. Of course they would take sandwiches, vacuum flask and plenty of warm clothing.

Sometimes they would go as far afield as the Indian swamp at Cowichan to record the long-billed marsh wren, or up in to the Highland district to find the extremely rare mountain quail. She had never heard this bird, or seen it, and was unable to identify it, so she phoned her friend David Stirling, of the parks branch, and played the tape for him over the telephone. He is an extremely good man on sound, she states, and he immediately said: "You have a good recording of the mountain quail, Grace."

One experiment she took part in was recording sounds of certain male beetles which are a hazard to the growth of Douglas fir seedlings. The beetles, placed in a container, were put in her linen cupboard, well insulated from all extraneous sounds. The beetles' sound was then recorded and later played back to the females, presumably to entice them from their depredations on the seedlings.

Grace Bell's study is an interesting place. On the shelves are some 300 tapes with fascinating labels such as: "Old squaw duck recorded off Oak Bay waterfront" and "Purple Finch — Frances Park," or "Black-headed Grosbeak, recorded on Allison Road." There is a swamp area on Allison Road which was formerly a great joy to her and where she once recorded yellow-throat, Wilson warbler, blue wing teal, and others. Now this area seems to be disappearing through subdivision, to the sorrow of the members of the Natural History Society.

There are also numerous tapes of insect sounds, crickets and grasshoppers of various species, bees, bumblebees, cicadas, and the big brown bat. There are tapes of amphibians, frogs and toads, and others of mystery sounds.

She has over 50 environmental tapes, all catalogued. In March and April, for instance, she recorded "fresh" sounds — the sound of a freshet; dawn from an Oak Bay beach; the sound of river water, rapids and falls, at Goldstream. In May she recorded tree frogs and birds at Beaver Lake and in August, Bonapartes and glaucous-winged gulls, at Clover Point. Once, at 5:30 a.m. she recorded shovellers, kildeer, white-crowned sparrows, cock pheasants, quail, warblers and house finches at Raper's Pond on Burnside.

In the autumn she went to the waterfront and recorded sea sounds: Harlequin ducks, wings in flight, yellowlegs, western grebe, and over all the mournful music of foghorns and in November she recorded widgeon, wind, sea, gulls, and cold.

Once a favorite place of hers and of all other local bird lovers, was a small swamp behind the new stadium at the University of Victoria. Here many migrants are seen, dowagers and sandpipers, golden plovers and kildeer, while skylarks and meadowlarks nest nearby. Nature, it seems, designed this small

HARBOR HOUSEKEEPER

Story by RON BAIRD

Nineteen-year-old high school student Philip Kolb has one of Victoria's oddest jobs.

He is housekeeper for the Inner Harbor.

Every day after school (and fulltime during the holidays) young Kolb putt-putts around the harbor aboard the flat-bottomed skiff Water Boy, gathering debris and deadheads into an encircling 300-foot boom, and then tows the lot out to Juan de Fuca Strait, where it is dispersed by the tide.

On the job for the past two years, student Kolb has been a confirmed water buff ever since his parents gave him an eight-foot skiff five years ago.

Since then, he has owned a 10-foot skiff and an eight-foot hydroplane; built a nine-foot sea sled and has in his back yard at the moment a 15-foot skiff.

He comes by his love of the water naturally.

His grandfather once owned a small local shipyard, Laing's, near Fisherman's Wharf.

The harbor-clearing Water Boy, powered by a nine-horse-power engine, is described by young Kolb as a "good, heavy boat, built of seven-ply, with three-quarter-inch sides and a half-inch bottom, and 16 feet in length."

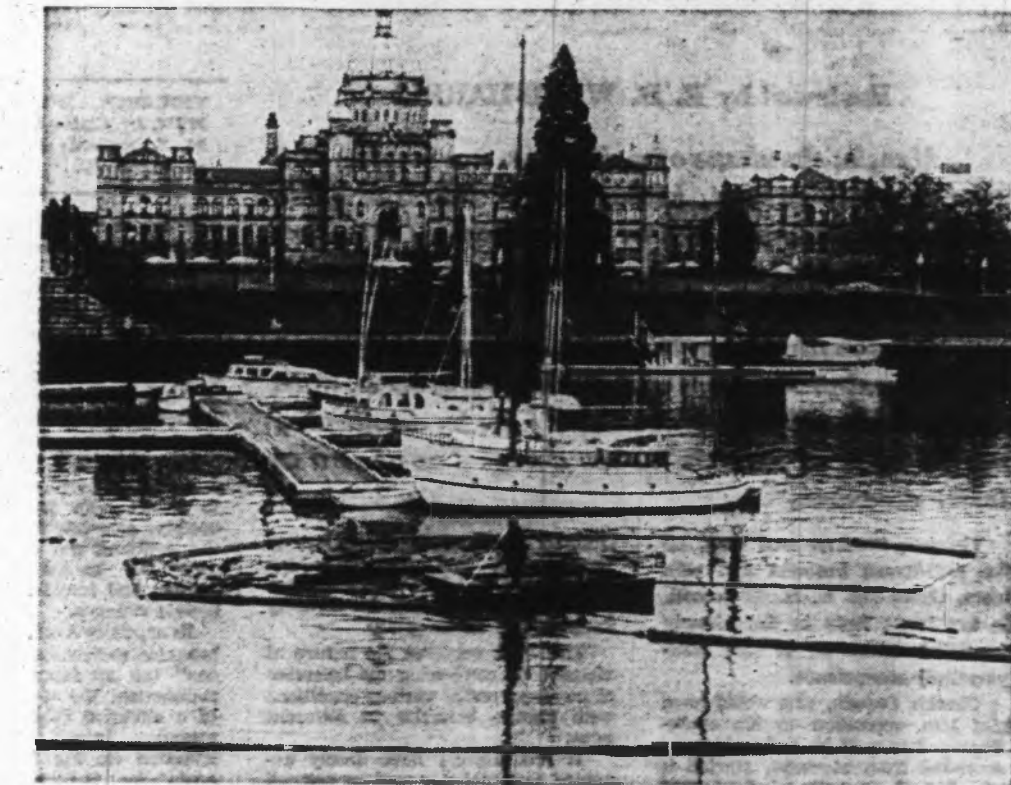

It has a top speed of six miles an hour, but he generally runs it at about two miles an hour when towing his boom out into the Strait.

His work day depends on the amount of debris which floats into the harbor.

"Some days I don't get finished until 9 at night," says Kolb, a grade 12 vocational student at Victoria High School. "It all depends on the tide. The start of the ebb tide is the best time."

He works for Bud Sims, who runs the two sight-seeing harbor craft, the Huckster and the Water Tourist, which carry tourists around Victoria's lengthy waterfront. Mr. Sims, in turn, contracts the job through the city. His area of responsibility extends from the Breakwater at the Ogden Point docks to the Johnson Street Bridge area.

In the summer, boatman Kolb sometimes works a 12-hour day. He has become something of a minor celebrity for strollers along the Causeway. Many lean on the stone wall and watch entranced as he jockeys the debris into his boom with an aluminum peavey.

His "catches" range from the dull to the unusual.

The majority of the junk he drags out to sea consists of planks, water-logged tree stumps, deadheads, plastic bags and bottles, but he has also snagged dead dogs, cats and birds, and was once sent in search of a dead cow someone claimed was floating in the harbor. Fortunately, he never found it. He did once gather up a half-submerged raft, measuring 450 square feet.

"Handling a cow would have been a pretty tough proposition," he recalls.

On occasion, he will make as many as three trips a day out into the strait to set his load adrift.

The annual Swiftsure race poses a problem. As many as 120 yachts are crammed into the Inner Harbor berthing facilities, and manoeuvring around them is a tough job of navigation.

"On one day last year," says cleanup boatman Kolb, "there was so much debris from the floats to the Black Ball ferry wharf you could walk on it."

But no matter what drifts into the Inner Harbor with the tide, he is on the job to get rid of it. Occasionally he is spelled off by a fellow high school student, Russ Turnbull, 18.

"The main thing," says his employer, Bud Sims, "is to keep the harbor clean and safe for navigation. After all, it's our show area, and we like to keep it looking at its best."

NATURE'S MUSIC

bit of water, fringed with reeds and grasses and stocked with food, for a special purpose — a resting place for migrating birds.

"Maybe it could be the University Nature Sanctuary," says Grace Bell, "and grow to be recognized far and wide for what it represents to Victoria and the University. Perhaps it is an opportunity for us to show that this provision of nature is recognized as having greater worth for its being right where it is — on grounds belonging to the University of Victoria. There are staff members of UVic who recognize the scientific aspects of recording wildlife sounds and this study and development I long to see within the biology department when there is an ornithologist to inaugurate it. I hope everything is not blacktopped, swamps all drained, and poisons increasingly distributed before this study pattern begins of biological-acoustics. There is always the grim possibility of this happening."

In her study is a migratory chart

compiled by Allen Poynter, of Victoria, a past-president of the Natural History Society and constant leader of bird groups. This invaluable chart numbers 225 migratory birds in the Victoria and district area. It charts the time of their appearance, length of stay, and dates of increase and decrease of each species over the year. Take the case of the turnstone, a short-legged, chunky fellow, with distinctive black and white plumage, beautiful in flight. Mrs. Bell has a tape of the lovely chattering voices of these birds, with interruptions by yellowheads and foghorns. They may now be seen over the rocks in and around Victoria. According to the chart they will winter here and in July will fly north to breed in Alaska and as far north as Sitka.

Grace collects numerous photographs of birds and one of her favorites is of a white pelican, photographed by Ralph Fryer in 1964 in Esquimalt Lagoon, a rare sight in this part of the world.

She has recorded in the Okanagan and in many parts of Vancouver Island — Black Creek, Miracle Beach, Quinsam Lake, Campbell River, Cowichan and the Saanich Peninsula. When Open House was held at the University of Victoria, Dr. Hagmeier of the biology department thought it would be an excellent opportunity to introduce her bird recordings to the public and they were played throughout the day, attracting widespread interest.

In the garden at St. Patrick Street is a well-constructed birdhouse where a multitude of birds may drop in for a meal, perfectly safe from mauling cats. Grace says rather bitterly that although dogs are licensed and restricted there seems to be no protection from cats. Through the window one watches with delight the tiny red-breasted and red-topped house finches, towhees, and flickers and it is a moment of pure beauty when a golden-crowned sparrow sings the whole three notes of his song. He so often only manages the first two!

In Victoria there is a Tuesday Group, as it is called, when a number of interested people meet, rain or shine, throughout the year, to go out birding under the leadership of Mr. Davidson. They meet at Willows Beach at the end of Bowker Avenue, at 9:30 a.m. and from there sally forth to a chosen spot, Esquimalt Lagoon, the Saanich Peninsula, or wherever else they may decide.

The tremendous task undertaken by Grace Bell is, she says, a hobby, but it is a most valuable one and performs a rare service to those working in the field of ornithology. She does wonder why more interest is not taken in the developing and furthering of capturing sounds of nature for enjoyment and study, as British Columbia is such a rich field for wildlife study.

Dr. Clifford Carl says that Mrs. Bell has accomplished a remarkable lot in the field of recording the sounds of nature. She is, he says, an outstanding example of what an amateur can do if she puts her mind to it, and, he adds, she is undoubtedly the authority on her subject in this part of the world.

Grace Bell is so full of enthusiasm and so completely dedicated in her love of nature that it is a delight to listen to her and a further delight to hear her beautiful recordings.

Scientists Explore Relation of Violence to Overcrowding

Monkeys Show Men How to Live in Peace

Reviewed by E. D. WARD-HARRIS

Man, in the shape of politicians, economists and other worldly experts, having totally failed to solve the human dilemma, is now paying serious attention to the findings of students of ethology, the science of character-formation.

It is the final irony that man, the potentially magnificent end-product of the evolutionary process, must now seek the solution to mankind's ills by duplicating the behavior of animals he has always despised as lesser creatures.

Violence, Monkeys and Man, by the well-known husband and wife team, Claire and W. M. S. Russell, is the latest book in the already formidable literature of this comparatively new science.

Charles Darwin, who would have met less opposition to his evolutionary theory if he had said man descended from monkeys, started it all, but it is acknowledged that Konrad Lorenz (King Solomon's Ring On Aggression) is the father of modern ethology, the foundation stone for the science of human behavior and psychology.

Some scientists, who appear to believe that the general public is too ignorant to grasp what they are doing, are not too happy about Lorenz's mass appeal. These are the people who poured scorn on playwright Robert Ardrey's excursions into science in African Genesis and The Territorial Imperative.

But what really united them in anger was the world-wide success of The Naked Ape, by the brilliant young zoologist, Desmond Morris, who is now better known outside scientific circles than his mentor, the great Niko Tinbergen, who founded the animal behavior group at Oxford University.

Science for science's sake is all very well, but these insular types refuse to recognize that their theories cannot be applied until they gain wide acceptance, and this will only come about through the efforts of able and articulate scientists like Lorenz, Morris and Sir Julian Huxley, to name only three, and exceptional laymen like Ardrey. (Rachael Carson's Silent Spring proved this conclusively.)

The Russells seem to have hit a compromise, and their Violence, Monkeys and Man is aimed both at students of the many disciplines it touches on, and the intelligent general reader. But, like all compromises, it will not be entirely satisfying to either group.

This book explores the nature of violence by comparing the behavior of monkeys under various conditions with human behavior in different ages.

It has always been freely accepted that violence was, or seemed to be, the result of economic stress, particularly food shortage, but this simple premise has been challenged by the state of the modern affluent societies in which violent crime is increasing in an alarming manner.

VIOLENCE, MONKEYS AND MAN, by Claire Russell and W. M. S. Russell; Macmillan; 340 pages; $11.50.

Does this mean, ask the Russells, that aggression is an inherent unconditional urge? They have sought an answer from recent studies of monkeys in the wild compared with those in zoos. Since zoo monkeys are well fed, the Russells suggest that violence can also result from crowded conditions.

The elaborate hierarchical system evolved by monkeys in the wild to achieve an ideal communistic society, completely breaks down in the artificial zoo environment and gives rise to the development of tension and social inequality which breeds violence.

In captivity monkeys develop new behavior patterns such as "pseudo-sex" (an appeasement tactic) and redirection, the deliberate creation of a situation (like war) to divert attention from another stressful situation (in the human field this could be the inflation-recession-unemployment syndrome.)

findings support their thesis, and then proceed to compare monkey and human behavior patterns, using historical as well as modern examples.

The most telling examples are the historical ones which show how in man the concept of redirection has led to violent crimes, riots and war as direct responses to stress in society.

Not the least fascinating aspect of this important book is the examination of the history of Europe to show a succession of complex responses to crowding which have had the effect of drastically reducing a population in danger of outgrowing its natural resources.

After an examination of the nature of human crowding, the authors, like others in other fields, see the solution in control of the birth-rate.

The social difficulties are discussed, and the Russells end on an optimistic note: that, by observing the monkeys, the way is open for mankind to produce a lasting and peaceful world civilization.

Scientific observation of monkeys is handled in a pedantic style, but the authors are less restrained when writing of humans. All in all, this is a most stimulating book, a valuable addition to ethological literature and, who knows, the catalyst for sanity.

Something of Interest for Everyone

Reviewed by JACK A. MYERS

If you've never seen or read an example of the oft quoted saying, "you can't tell a book by its cover," then read a book whose title is another old saying: To Have Your Cake and Eat It.

Several things, including the title, led me to believe I would not find much enjoyment in this book. I was most pleasantly surprised. It's a fascinating book.

Clara H. Brucker has included something of interest to anyone who reads this, her first book. Thankfully, she informs the reader rather early in her writing, how this interesting volume received its somewhat inane title.

TO HAVE YOUR CAKE AND EAT IT, by Clara H. Brucker; Vantage; 378 pages; $4.95.

Mrs. Brucker is a Name Dropper of the first order, and a most interesting one. She has met, or known well, many famous people the world over. Politicians, entertainers, royalty, statesmen, the greats and the near greats, are all mentioned in her book.

As I read this book, I couldn't believe that Mrs. Brucker was simply an army wife recounting her experiences and impressions gained while following her military spouse around the globe. Even the wife of the Secretary of the Army shouldn't write this well, I told myself.

The dust jacket biographical sketch of her past eased my suspicions that Mrs. Brucker had enlisted the aid of a ghost writer. She studied magazine writing at Columbia University.

Not only does she give interesting personal glimpses of famous people, but she tells of places, background of political and social protocol, and all her many observations the world over of Things.

Perhaps a better title, and equally as ancient as the one Mrs. Brucker chose, would be Of Cabages and Kings.

No country escaped the visitation of the Bruckers while he served in the Eisenhower Administration from 1955 to 1961. And very little escaped her close scrutiny, as she travelled with him in the circle of well-knowns, and as she went sightseeing with other army wives in various parts of the world.

Great and memorable events to which she was an eyewitness and enjoyed a vantage point few of us could hope to share, are detailed in her book and give new meaning to headlines we read during that period.

Thanks to Mrs. Brucker's interest in photography, eight pages in the centre of her book illustrate many of the personages she reports on elsewhere, in a manner reminiscent of a family album.

As a final point in its favor, To Have Your Cake and Eat It is written in 14 chapters. Each covers a separate period of time and is a story in itself, giving the reader a book which can be laid aside and returned to later without loss of continuity.

Male or female, young or old, there is interesting reading for everyone in this book. Don't judge it by its cover.

NATURE'S NOTEBOOK

AGES OF BIRDS, MAMMALS, REPTILES, AMPHIBIANS

"How old is old?" when the expression pertains to wildlife? This is a difficult question to answer authoritatively because animals living under natural conditions rarely approach the maximum possible age. This is due to a number of factors: high death rates to infant mortality, predators, accidents, sieges of bad weather, diseases, or competition for food and shelter.

In zoos where animals live under conditions ideally suited to prolong life most of these factors are almost or entirely eliminated, and, it is from these sources that most of the statistics concerning the longevity of animals are developed. Large animals have a tendency to live longer than their smaller relatives, but there are many exceptions. For instance, man lives the longest of all mammals. In general, birds live longer than mammals and certain reptiles live longest of all.

Some examples of extreme old age, secured from reliable records of zoos and aquariums all over the world, follow: Mammals: Elephant, 69 years, Grizzly Bear, 32 years, Bison, 30 years, Elk, 22 years, Beaver, 19 years, Eagle, 55 years, English Sparrow, 12 years; Reptiles: Alligator, 64 years; Squirrel, 16 years, Chipmunk, 12 years; Birds: Great Horned Owl, 68 years, Amphibians: Bullfrog, 30 years.

SPEEDY GOOSE

The flight of the Canada Goose is heavy but powerful. It averages about 55 miles an hour. To cut down air resistance, Canada Geese usually form a V-shaped flock. These magnificent migrators sometimes negotiate a non-stop flight of hundreds of miles.

By DON COLLINS

Down the mighty Malahat it tumbles — cold, clear, glistening — making great haste to keep its appointment with the sea.

If you listen you will hear its laughter. It is not the gay laughter you heard last summer when the waters of the Goldstream matched the carefree mood of the season. It is cruel on this bleak November afternoon. It is the sound of a wilderness stream taunting the brave ones who dare to do battle with it at this time every year.

The salmon have come once again on that truly phenomenal pilgrimage from the Pacific. Almost as one they have answered that mysterious call that draws them at all costs to the place of their birth to spawn.

The atmosphere on this day is fitting for the yacht club in Falmouth, England, and immediately dropped into our bunks for a well-earned rest.

"The Thialoca pounded through foul winds and high tides in the English Channel, reaching the island of Borkum, in the German Bight, on Aug. 12. Two days later we sailed to Emden in West Germany.

The Zenkers visited with Sigg's family there, and there was no end to questions and answers.

As Mr. Zenker points out, he got the ambition to cross the North Atlantic along the northern route a long time ago. "I studied reports of others who did it."

"If rafts can get across safely, there is no reason in the world why any well-built yacht should not be blessed with the same result."

After spending some time in West Germany, the Zenkers did another unusual thing — they returned to Canada by air, leaving the $6,500 Thialoca in West Germany.

But it's hardly likely that either the Thialoca or the Zenkers will remain idle for long.

"I can feel the old itch again," Mr. Zenker confided. "Just where we'll go next, I don't know, but go we will, and soon."

You can bet your bottom mainmast it won't be just to Salt Spring Island, either.

Flying Parretts

Amelia Earhart flew the vast reaches of the Pacific in primitive planes with few instruments and almost no navigational aids. This time there was no "landfall anxiety", and, before long, the Miami strip with its fabulous resort hotels was in sight and we swept up the "Fun and Sun" Florida coast for Palm Beach. Every beach hotel boasted huge swimming pools, in spite of miles and miles of sparkling white beaches.

Customs was informality itself. The official on duty pretended not to notice the overloaded Clipper, its belly nearly dragging on the ground. We told him about our liquor purchases (who could pass up Jamaica rum at $1.25 a bottle). "You are allowed to bring liquor back," he said, and diplomatically didn't ask how many bottles we had.

Flying north from the Strip, there were military training areas where the Vietnam war was making itself felt. Hundreds of helicopters were lifting guns, trucks and even small tanks. Gun flashes from armed choppers on manoeuvres could be clearly seen in the distance.

Later we passed along the edge of other training zones, where jet fighters were diving at targets marked out on the ground. The military reserve did not extend much beyond the targets, and we passed by as close as we dared. Suddenly the ground below erupted in smoke and flame as a new stick of fighters hurled straight down at the targets.

"Let's get out of here—they are dropping bombs!" Maude exclaimed.

Nature's Great Show

occasion. From the distance the hills of the Malahat rise like purple giants, here and there hiding their faces behind low wisps of cloud. But now that you are here the color has changed and you are standing in a vast green world, a privileged spectator to one of the greatest shows nature has ever provided.

A little while ago it was raining and the heavy dampness that lingers in this raw air of the hills has a penetrating bite. But no one seems to notice. Or, if they do notice, they don't really care.

A few weeks from now this place will be almost deserted and peaceful and a man will be able to come here and be alone with his thoughts. But today it is very much alive. The water, but a few inches deep, is throbbing with salmon; salmon fighting an inch-by-inch battle against the unrelenting current; salmon battered and bruised by the thousands of rocks that raise jagged heads above the surface; but salmon unwilling to yield.

People line one bank of the stream, and the bridge that spans it. Their arrival in large numbers has been accurately forecast and a refreshment caravan is doing a good business in hot dogs and coffee.

For the most part, the crowd seems to have come to cheer the performers. And the performers, fighting the good fight out there in the stream, well deserve this reaction.

For the third time since you have been standing here two salmon, moving as one with the precision of a dance team, lunge forward against the leaping, turning, ever-taunting water in an attempt to vault a small rock barrier. They disappear momentarily in the spray sent up by their tremendous thrashing. Then they are suddenly back again where they started, holding hard against the current and biding their time until they will try once again.

The eight-year-old girl standing beside you has watched this same scene played out by other salmon up and down the stream and it has become too much for her.

"I can't stand it any more," she whimpers. "It's too cruel. I'm going back to the car."

Her 10-year-old brother who said he didn't want to come because he considered it "too cornball," stands spellbound by the stream, eyes holding fast to the brave ones. You try to talk to him. But it's no use. He can no longer hear you.

A few yards downstream another dramatic scene is unfolding. A large male salmon, defending the trench his mate has dug in the gravel for her eggs, strikes out viciously at a third fish which ventures too close. There is a flurry, a splash and the intruder is gone.

Not everyone who has come here today fully appreciates the epic struggle of the salmon in this stream.

A young mother lobs a rock into the water close to a spot where six salmon have gathered. Without a word, her son follows her example.

All around now other specimens of the chum salmon are surging ahead, thrashing, retreating and waiting for the right moment to move on again, each of them driven by the magic force that possesses them at this time of year.

The two brave ones who have failed four times to clear the rock barrier, leap forward once again.

"Oh come on, make it, little fish—make it," urges the woman from Ontario who has never witnessed such a show before.

It is as if they have heard her and have drawn the necessary encouragement from her words. For, when the wild splashing subsides, they are over the precarious hurdle, waiting now to tackle still another.

"Oh, wonderful," the woman says.

You can't bring yourself to tell her that the brave ones will soon be dead; that they are returning to the place of their birth and that this is the end of a life cycle.

As you leave the vast green world of the Malahat you find you have a new respect for the salmon. You think of hooking into one next summer and somehow the notion doesn't sit right.

On the trip home the eight-year-old girl cries softly.

WHO HAS TIME TO READ ANY MORE?

occasionally, were quite peppy. Take the time Margo was stricken with a violent headache at the close of the afternoon session, entailing cancellation of a dinner engagement at a friend's home. Jim Simon agreed to pinch hit for his wife for the evening hours, and also cancelled the dinner engagement, while Margo took her aching self to bed. All went well until a little old lady tottered in, demanding: "Where is Mrs. Simon? Mrs. Simon always helps me to pick my books! Aren't you going to give me a hand, sir?"

When Jim explained that he was really too busy, that she could have any book she fancied, she appeared at his side in a surprisingly short time with the unabridged Webster Dictionary. "This is the one I want, then," Jim regarded the black-robed figure, the hat and encircling veil well down over her head, the shawl wrapped around the shaking shoulders — there was something familiar there, but when he glimpsed the moustache through the veil he picked up the book and brought it down on the "lady's" head, saying emphatically: "That book you cannot take out!" The friend who he was to have had dinner with took to his heels!

With a book count of 17,827, and steadily increasing support given by the Town of Comox to the Public Library and by the School Board to the schools, reading is still big business here.

seamanship he managed to rescue the captain and crew. Then up came a Coastguard cutter and pinched him.

What's more he went to jail. Which action roused considerable ire up and down the coast. However when he came out the citizens of Portland gave him a gold medal. They say he contracted TB in jail and didn't live very long after the experience.

What kind of men were rum runners? Take Jack Boydell who used to run out of here with the M-381, powered with a big Sterling engine. When the trade folded he and boat worked for the B.C. Packers. Came a day when he was out on the west coast with a plant superintendent looking for pilchard and the boat caught fire. There was only one life jacket aboard, so Jack made the superintendent put it on. Because he was a married man with a family.

Jack said he would get by somehow by hanging on to something. He didn't make it, but the superintendent did.

On a lesser scale of humanitarian values, but selfless nevertheless, was the case of Joe Fleming who used to haul his loads from Spoon Bay in the Uplands to Discovery Island. Which was back in the days when Mrs. Croft ran the lighthouse. He phoned one day to say that an Indian woman on the island was about to add to the population, and could a car meet him at Sonny Bowker's place at Turkey Head. I got there in fast time, but no one showed. Later I learned that Joe had to assist in the obstetrics, thoughtfully providing the mother with a slug of rum, from one of a dozen cases on his boat.

The event passed without incident, and some years later, chatting with Joe I asked him how the woman was getting along. "Oh, she's had several kids since then," said Joe with a smile. Then he slightly lowered his tone and confidentially imparted the information: "But that rum one, he's the best of the lot!"

But this is wandering from the coastwise operations of the Western Freighters. Skippers of their vessels got $1,000 a month, first officers and chief engineers $750 and deck hands got about $300 or $400, which was a tidy jump from the ordinary $60 or $65 a month. CPR skippers were then getting around $250.

To fend off any temptation to breach the cargo, the crew got free beer. Before every sailing, Harry Maynard would deliver 30 barrels (10 dozen to a barrel) of Silver Spring beer.

At the time I speak of the British pound stood around $4.86 in Canadian funds, give or take a cent and Western bought its whisky for 40 shillings a case. With a quarter almost equal to a shilling, it spells out about $10 a case. Of course, on top of that was Canadian duty, $3.50 a proof gallon. A case of Scotch is about 2.3 fluid gallons, which equals 1.875 proof gallons. Which means that in the separation of alcohol and water, you pay duty on the spirits.

Anyway it was roughly about $7 a case duty. Today the duty on a proof gallon is $14.25, which accounts to a great extent for some of those flattened wallets at Liquor Store counters.

In those days freight from England, plus stevedoring here and trucking to a warehouse added 46 cents to each case. So you could figure that a bottle that landed here for about $1.40 sold for $4 off the California coast. Western Freighters used to figure that every vessel's round trip grossed $1,000,000. In 12 trips one vessel disposed of 275,000 cases.

I cannot find that any of the fleet got really pressed to the wall by the Coast Guard, although a couple of them, the Algonquin and Shawnee, were supposed to make life miserable for the Canadian hucksters. On one occasion Capt. Vosper of the Kuyakuzmt noticed them nosing in from both sides around dusk. When it was dark he heaved over the side a sort of wooden platform from the centre of which stuck up a 40-foot spar. On top of it was a lantern. Then he doused the ships lights, and slowly backed away. All night the Coast Guard kept in view what they thought was a masthead light. When dawn broke came disillusionment. The Canadian was nowhere in sight.

The Speedway was a total loss when she caught fire out in the Straits.

Being a wooden schooner, the fire took hold beyond the efforts of the crew. Finally they took off and let her burn. They had tried jettisoning the cargo to reach the fire, which accounted for a whale of a lot of free scotch bobbing in the sea. One fisherman from Port Angeles with a keen sense of opportunity, came out with a seine boat, shot the seine and got himself 1,200 cases.

Once, off the Farallones, Capt. Nicholls found he had to move the Prince Albert in a hurry, but somehow the anchor wouldn't come up. When it did he found he had hooked the Pacific cable! "Cut the goddam thing," he yelled from the bridge.

It was cut. Which didn't at all please the Pacific Cable Board who took action. The sheriff here seized the Prince Albert, and sold it at public auction at Esquimalt for $25,000. Later she was converted to a tug, towing Davis rafts from the Queen Charlottes.

Eventually the free and easy sport of smuggling liquor across the border led to a governmental enquiry, the result of which rather put a crimp in the bonanza. Then when U.S. prohibition was repealed in 1933, it was curtains for the clandestine booze trade.

Wharf Street's operators, from an atmosphere of "whisky gahre" then turned to other and more humdrum pursuits.
